Joint Installation G. A. R. and W. R. C.

A good time was enjoyed Tuesday evening by the veterans of the Grand Army and the members of Reynolds Relief Corps at a joint installation of the officers of each organization at G. A. R. hall.

In the afternoon a regular meeting was held by the W. R. C., which was followed at 6 P. M. by a supper, to which members of Reynolds Post and others were invited. The blessing was asked by Rev. Frank Kingdon. The menu included cold meats, escalloped corn, baked beans, pies, rolls and coffee. On the supper committee were Caroline Sewall, Abbie Jordan, Jennie Callahan, Jennie Keene, Adelaide MaDan, Alice Scholes, Elizabeth Abram, Sarah Horsley, Margaret Green Grace Walker and Julia Carr.

Commander Bicknell

Adjourning to the upper hall the officers of Reynolds Post were installed in the presence of members of W. R. C. and other allied organizations and a few invited guests. Town Clerk Henry A. Monk of Braintree, a past commander of Gen. Sylvanus Thayer Post made an excellent installing officer, assisted by Past Commander W. L. Gage of the same post as officer of the day. The obligation pledges and bonds seemed unnecessary of the officers-elect, but were required by the ritual.

The new officers are:

Commander,—Francis A. Bicknell.
S. V. C.,—William Litchfield.
J. V. C.—Bradford Denton.
Adjutant,—Waldo Turner.
Surgeon,—W. A. Drake.
Chaplain,—Bradford Hawes.
O. of D.,—David Dunbar.
Quar.,—Elbridge Nash.
O. G.,—William H. Moran.
P. I.,—Maurice Cleary.
O. S.,—Joseph Ford.
S. M.,—Andrew Culley.

Maj. Bicknell, upon being installed as commander, thanked each officer with a little pleasantry, and then presented gifts to both the installing officers.

W. R. C. INSTALLATION

Then came the W. R. C. installation with Mrs. Mary E. Holbrook, past department president, as installing officer, assisted by Mrs. Mabel Redway as conductor. Mrs. Redway is past department senior vice-president of New Jersey, and added much to the impressiveness of the ceremony.

These officers were installed:

President,—Carrie Maynard.
S. V. P.,—Margaret Green.
J. V. P.,—Elizabeth Abrams.
Chap.,—Anna Litchfield.
Treas.,—Carrie Loring.
Sec.,—Lucci Bagley.
Con.,—Catherine Day.
G.,—Pauline Cope.
A. S.,—Mary D. White.
A. G.,—Mary Clarke.
Patriotic Instructor,—Elizabeth Fenton.
Color Bearers,—Marta Belcher, Ollie Sewall, Ellen B. Kidder and E. Audie Pease.
Musician,—Mary R. Flint.
Press Correspondent,—Jennie A. Keene.

Mrs. Maynard, the new president, in behalf of the Corps, presented a glass to both the installing officers, and Mrs. Loring presented $10 to Mrs. Catherine Day, the chairman of the executive committee. Addresses and music completed the program.

ANNUAL CHILDREN'S PARTY

Saturday, Jan. 1, the Monday Club gave its annual party for the children. In this case, the children were all the way from tiny tots to grownups in size if not age. Mrs. Fred Alden had arranged a delightful entertainment for them and William Burton as a ventriloquist, Miss Myrtle Rice as a reader, and Anna Garrity and William Irwin as dancers, all from Weymouth town, gave them much pleasure.

Then to the music of the orchestra Mrs. Thomas, violinist; Mrs. Cushing, piano; and Mr. Burkhardt, traps, came the grand march. All the younger ones were in costume and as they circled the hall the onlookers felt fairy tales were true. A valentine with a butterfly, a clown with a Red Cross nurse, Spanish and Scotch, a jockey and a fluffy flower, all these and many more, forming a line of color.

After the march all went to the lower hall where Mrs. Cottell, as hostess, with members of the hospitality committee served ice cream and fancy cookies, and the little ones in their odd costumes grouped at the tables were decidedly ornamental.

After refreshments came the games for small ones in the lower hall, while the older ones danced in the main hall and everyone danced, and everyone smiled, and each and everyone said: "This is the best party yet."

C. M. A. Men's Club Elects New President

William J. Holbrook, the town counsel of Weymouth, was elected on Wednesday evening as president of the Men's Club of the Clapp Memorial Association at the annual meeting. The other officers elected are:

Vice-president, Rev. Frank Kingdon.
Secretary, F. W. Preston.
Treasurer, William A. Hodges.
Executive Committee,—W. C. Bartle, W. A. Wheaton, H. P. Tilden, W. H. Holbrook, H. R. Drinkwater, P. A. Counathan, T. F. Lynch, George W. Perry and Fred M. Crocker.

Preceding the election, a hot roast beef supper was served, and was up to the usual standard. Young men acted as waiters.

The new president was introduced by Horace R. Drinkwater, and presided during the balance of the evening.

The speaker was Hon. Sanford Bates, the State Commissioner of Corrections, who spoke relative to the State and county institutions, particularly with reference to the bill in the Legislature providing that the State shall take control of all penal institutions.

Now there are five state institutions, and 14 county institutions. Just why there should be this division of inmates was difficult to explain. We had inherited our county management from the mother country, but England had thrown it over. The speaker endeavored to treat the question impartially, and told the argument for and against a change to State control.

Some of the county institutions had been closed because there were no prisoners, and others had only a few. State control had been advocated since 1870, and favored by all recent committees. It allowed a better classification of prisoners, and they could [illegible] Preventive work. He showed the [illegible] in management in state and county institutions, and believed [illegible] State control would be more economical, and better for the welfare of the inmates.

The arguments against State control were: Concentration of power would be bad, and unfortunates would lose the friendly help of the sheriff.

Naturally, the county officials were against it, and they have kept the control. But under State control there would be a chance to do real constructive work.

The speaker invited questions, and answered questions asked by Mr. Drinkwater, President Holbrook and others. He was given a rising vote of thanks.

COMMUNITY ASSOCIATION

The Zedeler concert Tuesday evening at the Community Association was a rare musical treat and was greatly enjoyed by a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Zedler, the manager, prefaced each number with a few well chosen remarks concerning either the author or the story of the piece. The combining of this educational feature with the rendering of the music made the evening doubly enjoyable. The program was a classical one.

Frank Herbert Palmer delivered his interesting lecture, "A few of our [illegible]," illustrated with stereopticon views before a large and enthusiastic audience of children in the Community House Tuesday afternoon. [illegible] the second in the series of [illegible]

D'Annunzio Gives In and the War Over Fiume Is Ended After Hot Fighting.

GERMANY WON'T DEMOBILIZE

Refusal to Disband Civil Militia May Lead to French Occupation of Ruhr District — Bolsheviki Threaten Western Movement—Industrial Events in America.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

As was easily foreseen, the Italo-Fiume war has come to a speedy end with the collapse of D'Annunzio's resistance. The poet, who had declared he would interpose his bloody corpse between the Italian forces and Fiume, thought better of it, and on Wednesday issued a proclamation saying that he now felt disposed to defend his life by all means, since it was not worth while to throw it away in the service of a people whom he now despises. Therefore he was about to leave Fiume by airplane. The mayor of that city and its director of national defense agreed to recognize the treaty of Rapallo. D'Annunzio consented to release his legionnaires from their oaths of allegiance, and it was arranged that they should be disbanded and that the Italian government should issue a proclamation of general amnesty. There was rejoicing throughout Italy over the settlement, for the Italians did not at all like the job of shooting down their fellow countrymen.

Peace was not attained without much bloodshed, for the legionnaires fought desperately and bravely for several days after General Caviglia's troops began the real attack. Taking advantage of the rough terrain about the city, they laid many ambuscades and conducted a guerrilla warfare with hand grenades and machine guns that cost the lives of many regulars. In the city they poured a hot fire from the balconies, roofs and windows of apparently abandoned buildings, and even the women helped. The Italian military authorities refused to use artillery against the city itself, striving to save it from destruction, but the warships in the harbor bombarded the outer defenses. D'Annunzio was slightly wounded in the head by a fragment of a shell. The curtain has now fallen on this latest tragi-comedy of the warrior poet, who says he is ashamed of being an Italian.

Relations between France and Germany reached another critical stage at the end of the week, when Berlin, through the undersecretary for foreign affairs, warned the British and Italian ambassadors that it would be impossible for Germany to resume the conference on reparations at Brussels January 10 unless France withdraws its demand for the dissolution of the civil militia, which is called the einwohnerwehr. In this way Germany seeks to take advantage of the somewhat strained relations between Paris and London and Rome.

By the Spa agreement Germany was to complete her demobilization by January 1, and if this is not done, as her intention appears to be at this writing, France will have the right to occupy the Ruhr district or Frankfort. Plans for the necessary military operations already have been drawn up by Marshal Foch and General Weygand. The report of General Nollet, the French chief of the interallied commission of control in Germany, was what precipitated the matter. He told the council of ambassadors in Paris that the civil militia was a real military organization of nearly two million soldiers, camouflaged as a policing force, and he presented the case in such warm language that the ambassadors did not know just how to handle it. So they passed it up to the supreme council, which is to meet early in January in Nice or Cannes. Premier Lloyd George said he could not take it up because of pressing domestic affairs, and Premier Giolitti of Italy declared he could not leave because of the Fiume crisis. So far France has been insistent on the complete disarmament of Germany, and it is not unlikely that she will proceed alone with the military measures seemingly justified by Germany's violation of the Spa pact. Then it will be up to Great Britain and Italy to decide whether to support their ally or to call her off, as they did once before, in the interests of a financial settlement with Berlin.

According to secret information received by the French foreign office, the Russian Reds not only are threatening to overrun and absorb Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaijan, but also are preparing for another attack on Poland and the Baltic states, and possibly on Roumania. In the Minsk region soviet troops are being concentrated in large numbers, threatening especially Lithuania and Poland; and farther north about 50,000 of them were said to have crossed the Latvian frontier and occupied several towns. Esthonia, too, was alarmed by the presence of large bodies of Red cavalry on her borders. Negotiations for permanent peace between Poland and Russia were broken off by the soviet representatives, who said in effect that the Red victories elsewhere made the treaty unnecessary to them. In Podolia the Russians are gathering heavy forces to compel Roumania to evacuate Bessarabia. The lakes and marshes are frozen over and campaigning will be possible until March.

Meanwhile all efforts of the soviet authorities to arrange for resumption of trade seem to have fallen flat, owing partly to their impudent bad faith in trade matters and partly to their failure to stop spreading their propaganda in other countries. The United States government decided that Martens, the soviet "envoy," should be deported, and Moscow advised him to abandon his work here and submit. Most of the nations are now coming to the view that bolshevism in Russia will die out before long if left to itself, and are proceeding on that theory. Evidence that the bolshevist leaders themselves are changing their policy lies in the fact that they are now granting many concessions to foreigners, which is absolutely contrary to bolshevist principles. In addressing the soviet congress in Moscow Lenine explained that this was a temporary necessity, as the country must have materials for its economic rebuilding. Information received by our state department is that the bourgeoisie are more numerous than ever in Russia and are gradually regaining control, and that the tendency is toward the formation of an autocratic government.

Following stormy sessions in Tours, in the course of which the members sometimes came to blows, the French Socialist party has split into three factions. The left wing has voted to obey the commands of Lenine and to adhere fully to the third internationale; the right wing opposes throwing the party organization into the hands of the communists; and the centrists adhere to the internationale with reservations. This last faction may split, one half joining the left wing and the other going with the right. A woman agent of the Moscow internationale, who reached Tours despite the efforts of the government to keep her out, had much to do with the stand taken by the extreme radicals.

British organized labor has definitely ranged itself against the government in the Irish controversy, at least so far as government methods are concerned. The labor commission which visited Ireland has made its final report, in which it scathingly denounces the course of the English authorities in Ireland and expresses the belief that coercion will be unable to suppress either the Sinn Fein movement or the "republican army." The latter, it asserts, is formidable because it is not concentrated and has the sympathy and support of the vast mass of the population. Of murders and reprisals the report says:

"So great has been the provocation by the crown forces that 80 per cent of Irish men and women now regard the shooting of policemen and the throwing of bombs at lorries with the same philosophic resignation that Mr. Lloyd George displays toward arson and pillage and the shooting of civilians in the presence of their wives and children."

The auxiliaries—black and tans—and most of the royal Irish constabulary are declared utterly unfit for their duties.

To a meeting of 900 delegates representing three million trades unionists the members of the commission told in detail what they saw and learned in Ireland, and a resolution was adopted demanding that the government grant a judicial investigation into the action of crown forces in Ireland with view to punishing those guilty of crimes.

The time limit for turning in all arms in Ireland expired Wednesday, and the officials admitted very few had been surrendered.

The Irish Women's Organization has issued a circular defying the order of the government rendering liable to death anyone harboring a rebel. The circular says: "The women of Ireland consider it a crime for any young Irishman of military age not to carry arms in defense of his country, and it is even a greater crime for any person of Irish blood to refuse to harbor or assist our brave soldiers."

Though leaders in business and finance issue frequent statements to the effect that business stagnation in America has about reached the low point and that the future really looks rosy to them, the mass of the people are far from being optimistic, and it must be admitted that conditions seem to justify their view. Demand has fallen to a minimum, and of course production has decreased in proportion. Prices have declined, but while this is a source of satisfaction to the consumer, it is painful to the producer, and the producer who is especially mournful is the farmer. What congress is planning to do for him in the way of an emergency tariff may help, but most economists doubt it.

There were several occurrences of note last week in the industrial field. The most startling, perhaps, was the closing down of the Ford automobile works at Detroit for an indefinite period. This was said to be due to a marked falling off in orders and the return of many cars. Under normal conditions 50,000 men are employed in the shops that closed. The employees were told not to report before February 1.

Another interesting event was the refusal of the union employees of the Pullman company in the car works at Pullman, Ill., to have their wages reduced as far as 20 per cent. The suggestion had been accepted by the employees' industrial relations committee in consideration of the declining commodity prices and the readjustment in industry. They said they realized the company must get more business in order to avoid drastic reduction of working forces, and that it must cut costs to meet increased competition. The wages of the employees have more than doubled in the last four years. The union men made no threat of striking if wages were cut, but intimated that trouble would follow such action. Many of the shop workers are not in unions.

Employees of some other big concerns, especially in the textile and clothing industries of the East, have been compelled to accept reductions in wages rather than have the works close down.

In the effort to carry out the Republican promises of reduced expenses, the house appropriations committee cut $420,914,192 from the estimates for the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year 1922, leaving $383,611,292. The largest single reduction was $147,000,000 of what was asked for the federal shipping board. The committee also recommended a cut of more than eleven millions in the post office department appropriation bill; but the total reported is $573,964,721, which is nearly seventy millions more than the appropriation for this year.

The Democrats pointed out that the total carried by both bills adds about seventeen millions to the cost of running the government; but the Republicans retorted that they had made large cuts in the sums asked by Democratic heads of departments. Those who are clamoring for a reduction in federal taxes may draw their own conclusions as to the prospect.

"And how did my clever little darling manage that?" mother asked.

Governor-elect Channing H. Cox of Massachusetts will have former Mayor Herman A. MacDonald of Beverly as his private secretary and assistant. This announcement is made at the State House, together with the fact that Adjutant-General Jesse F. Stevens will continue as head of the military staff of the new Governor.

"I believe that 1921 will be a big year for Boston business," declared Maj. P. F. O'Keefe of the Pilgrim Publicity Association, speaking at the luncheon of that organization. He believed it will be as good as 1920, if not better. He said that his forecast is based on data related to 31 manufactures, the managers of which are as optimistic as he.

Three gunmen spirited Peter Alves of New Bedford into a secluded street in their automobile, and after robbing him of $50 and throwing him to the side of the road, one of the bandits fired two shots at him, both of which struck the side of his head. He was rushed to St. Luke's Hospital in a police ambulance and found not to be seriously injured.

Wages of common laborers in Springfield, Mass., were reduced from 67 1-2 to 50 cents an hour Jan. 1, according to announcement by the Springfield Building Trades Association. The scale, agreed upon by both members and nonmembers of the association, affects about 2000 men employed on building projects and represented in the Allied Building Trades Council.

The railroads' coal bill for the first nine months of this year was $97,026,624 more than during the corresponding period last year, said a statement issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The cost of coal was greater in the New England district than in any other place in the country, the commission said, the cost being $7.72 per net ton, as against $5.67 a ton last year.

Under the terms of the will of Robert M. Judson, filed for probate in Bridgeport, Conn., Yale University is made residuary legatee of the estate, which is valued at more than $1,000,000. Mr. Judson died in New Canaan recently. The will provides that in case Yale "is unable to accept or declines to accept" the bequest, Columbia University should be substituted as residuary legatee.

Receipts of fresh groundfish this year will be approximately 25,000,000 pounds greater than at any time in the 32 years that fish statistics have been compiled in Boston. The total is 122,226,060 pounds, as against 94,779,295 in 1919. The record heretofore was 100,232,968 pounds in 1910.

The town of Gardner in Worcester county, Mass., seeks to become the 40th city in Massachusetts in a bill filed with the clerk of the House by Representative Charles H. Hartshorn of Gardner. The town now has a population of 17,000, and at a town meeting in October considered changing its government either to a city or to the limited town meeting plan, and the city plan prevailed.

Philip Bova, of Lawrence, Mass., aged 10, had been living on 10 cents' worth of food per day. He frequently went to sleep in school, due to exhaustion and undernourishment. His father had seen fit to discontinue payment to the probation officer of $3 a week for Philip's subsistence. Investigation followed. A jail sentence was held out to the father as an alternative. Thereupon the latter agreed to do his duty by the lad.

Olds & Whipple, in business in Hartford, Conn., for 43 years, manufacturers of fertilizers, dealers in fertilizers, agricultural implements, ranges, furnaces, etc., have taken out papers of incorporation, with paid-in capital of $1,000,000. The firm has long consisted of Alfred A. Olds and Frank H. Whipple, its founders, and now Frank A. Olds, who has long been active in the business, is admitted as a substantial stockholder. The company has in process of completion a large concrete and steel building in East Hartford for the manufacture of fertilizers.

Analyzing the shoe market from the viewpoint of the retailer, John C. Sherwood, of the shoe firm of the Colby-Sherwood Company of Waterbury, Conn., says: "The conditions in the shoe trade at present are more complex and in some phases more uncertain than they have been at any time during recent years. A correct analysis of the 'cause and effect of the present situation and an accurate forecast of the near future is of vital importance to every shoe buyer. There is everything to indicate that prices for the spring season will be materially lower than they have been for the past two years."

In a little town in southwestern Connecticut—to be more specific, Greenwich—is an automobile graveyard where rest the bones of more than $100,000 worth of the finest cars ever placed on the market. Most of them when they met with their untimely end, were brand new. None is very old, and all are valuable, even as junk. They stand as individual monuments to drivers who failed to heed the cry of "Stop" and went on in the general direction of the Massachusetts line only to find that the revenue men lose little time in taking up the challenge and are close behind in a machine that is fairly burning up the road.

Joseph E. Warner, former speaker of the Massachusetts House, in an address before the Reciprocity Club of Boston, emphasized the need for development of the agricultural resources of Massachusetts. He pointed out that the number of farms in that state have decreased until only 1,000,000 acres are under cultivation, and that $300,000,000 is spent annually outside the state for food products. In discussing state problems he urged further development of the highways and a more rigid supervision of motorists because of accidents. He lauded the state for its child welfare work and other public welfare endeavors.

Hat manufacturing and its subsidiary industries of Danbury, Conn., continue dull, awaiting further price reductions in fur and other raw materials. These reductions have long been expected, and apparently they are now on their way in earnest. Most of the fur now being used in the manufacture of what few hats are being turned out was bought before the prices of this material reached the height. Hat manufacturers have refrained for more than six months from buying, and fur cutters have not been over anxious to sell. Meanwhile, jobbers have made only such price reductions in stocks of finished goods on hand as they were compelled to make.

The Massachusetts commission on necessaries of life has issued another warning to retail coal dealers, declaring that no justification longer exists for high prices, and intimating that it might be forced to "take action" against dealers who continue to ask top prices. The warning was appended to the regular questionaire sent out each month to the 750 retail coal dealers of the state. The commission points out that the shipment of anthracite to lake ports has been completed, that production is rapidly approaching normal conditions and that the coal received through New England gateways during December showed an increase of 15 per cent.

He Passed.

"At one of our examinations," says a member of the faculty of a western university, "a nervous student had been instructed to write out examples of the indicative, subjunctive, potential and exclamatory moods. His efforts resulted as follows: 'I am endeavoring to pass an English examination. If I answer 20 questions, I shall pass. If I answer 12, I may pass. God help me!'"—Harper's Magazine.

Leather-Stocking.

Leather-Stocking is the nickname of Natty Bumppo, one of the favorite characters drawn by the American writer of Indian and sea tales, James Fenimore Cooper. The bearer of the nickname is a half-savage, half-Christian chevalier of American wild life of almost a century and a quarter ago. Leather-Stocking reappears and closes his career in Cooper's story, "The Prairie."

DRIVEWAY AND WALK IN ONE

Effective Combination Shown Here Is the Idea of Wideawake Los Angeles Man.

Once a Los Angeles man bought a new colonial house with a small garage at the rear. There was neither a driveway leading to the garage nor steps leading to the house entrance. The house was so new that only the lawn in front had been finished.

It was up to the owner to finish the job. But labor and building materials were costly, the owner was not a rich man, and he had already spent several thousand dollars on the venture.

So he developed an entirely new scheme. He built his driveway and sidewalk together, putting a flight of short steps, two and one half feet wide, between the driveway strips, making the whole a solid piece of cement work. At each side he built a retaining wall to hold the lawn earth in place.

At the top of the steps a narrow walk branches off, leading to the front porch of the house.

The general scheme is decidedly effective, and the owner says he saved considerable money in labor and material by building in combination rather than by putting in a separate driveway and walk. picture of this driveway with steps in place of the usual grass strip is shown above.—Popular Science Monthly.

BENEFIT IN TOWN PLANNING

Unreasonable to Think That, Without Guidance, Events Will Shape Themselves to Best Advantage.

Town planning, city planning and country planning, as well as the planning of national highways, waterways, and so on, have made it more and more evident during the last few years that, though the earth can be depended upon to turn rightly upon its axis, things upon the earth cannot profitably be left just to grow, like Topsy. There is a vast difference between a river running wild and one laden with shipping and furnishing valuable water power; between a road determined as to course by a cowpath, following the direction of least resistance, and one that serves to the utmost the interests of those who use it; between national park areas where certain selfish interests have encroached and those in which playground and beauty have been faithfully maintained; between a community where every private interest has fought for power and place and one where residents, merchants, manufacturers and public have received just consideration in view of the interests of all. It is even as the difference between the seeds planted by the farmer according to the fundamentals of good gardening and those which grow as they may in the thicket by the fence.—Christian Science Monitor.

Flower Boxes Instead of Trees.

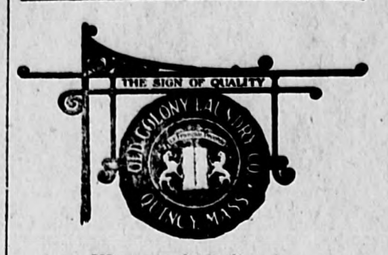

The shores of New England, all the way from southern Connecticut, which is almost suburban to New York city, to the farthest reaches of the rocky Maine coast, abound in villages whose natural beauty, especially very near the water, is marred by their paucity of foliage, for trees do not thrive close to the ocean. Of late years there has grown up, particularly in the communities which have a summer influx of visitors, a determination to beautify the barren treeless spots by the typically English device of the flower box. Hundreds of summer cottage properties which would, by reason of their lack of shade trees, look barren and commonplace, achieve something of real distinction by having their porch rails and window sashes present to the eye of the beholder, a luxuriant growth of trailing ivy in a green box, studded perhaps with bright red geranium, purple heliotrope, or multicolored nasturtiums.—Christian Science Monitor.

SAVED FROM DROWNING

A New Year tragedy was narrowly averted through the prompt action of William Mitchell of Grant street about 2 o'clock last Saturday afternoon

John Decree, 7 years old of Quincy who is visiting on Grant street, was coasting down a small hill near the Commercial House, East Weymouth, to a pond that was frozen over, except near the dam. Before he could stop, boy and sled coasted into the deep cold water. Several little children, who were skating nearby, were attracted by the screams of the boy, and they began to cry. This drew the attention of William Mitchell, 14 years old, a large fellow for his age, who skated quickly to the scene, but the ice was thin near that spot and would not hold his weight. His little sister Frances Mitchell volunteered to go near the edge and grab the boy's hand, who was growing weak and his hold on his sled was slipping. Mitchell dragged them both to safety. The boy was taken to relatives on Grant street. His sled was recovered from the pond a few days later.

QUINCY THEATRE

Manager C. R. Black of the Quincy Theatre announces: "Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm" for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, Jan. 10, 11 and 12. Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm is a State of Maine play in four acts, written by Kate Douglas Wiggins and Charlotte Thompson. This unusual play has been secured for the three days only. Special scenery and effects has also been arranged as well as characters for this play. Fifteen people are taking part in this great production. The play was secured by paying enormous royalty. Every man, woman and child is requested to see this greatest of plays by the Al Luttringer Stock Co. Anna Kingsley plays an unusual part of Rebecca, in "Rebecca of Sunny Brook Farm." Some idea of the magnitude of preparations being made to put on this show may be gained by the following: The Al Luttringer Stock Co. has been for the past two weeks preparing ahead to make this the greatest of shows ever been shown in Quincy. Special study has also been arranged by the members as well as costumes for this play and no expense has been spared to make this the supreme stock play of the season by the management. This is a regular $1.50 show and has played many consecutive engagements throughout the entire country. However the old prices will prevail in Quincy of 18, 27 and 50 cents.

The play for Thursday, Friday and Saturday is entitled: "The Price He Paid", and is a story of the Kentucky mountains based on a conflict between the weak and the strong and their every-day life in the Kentucky mountains. Love, hate and honor seem to be the dominate feature throughout the entire play, in the survival of the fittest. This is considered about one of the most beautiful stories ever written, or that has been shown on any American stage, and is a sequel to the famous play entitled: "The Call of the Woods." The Al Luttringer Stock Co. has also made special preparations in putting on this play: "The Price He Paid." This play for one solid year played at one of the big Chicago houses.

The Paramount picture for the first three days of the week, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday is the picture entitled: "The Right to Love" featuring May Murray. Six reels. The Paramount picture for the last three days of the week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday is the picture entitled: "Half An Hour" featuring Dorothy Dalton as the leading role. The management has been exceptionally lucky in securing these two special pictures in conjunction with these two Al Luttringer Stock Co. plays. Pathe weekly will also be shown at these performances.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

OHIO CHAMP FOOTBALL TEAM IS COMPOSED OF LEGION MEN

When the Ohio State university football team, champions of the Western conference, hit the line, it had much of the Chateau-Thierry and Argonne punch with it, for ten of the eleven regulars composing the first team are war veterans and members of the American Legion. Moreover, the team, which defeated Illinois university for the conference title, was coached by a Legionnaire.

Legionnaires on the team say that the only reason why the team is not all Legion is because Harry Workman, sophomore quarterback, was too young to enter the service. Seventeen members of the first squad are Legionnaires.

Ohio State won from Chicago, Michigan, Wisconsin, Purdue, Oberlin and Ohio Wesleyan and scored 58 points in conference games against 20 for its opponents. American Legion members carried the ball over the goal lines for 14 touchdowns out of a total of 20 made by the team during the 1920 season and also scored five of its touchdowns out of seven made against conference teams.

OBJECTIVES OF THE LEGION

National Commander Galbraith Outlines What Is Planned to Be Accomplished During the Year.

The objectives of the American Legion for the year 1921 were told by F. W. Galbraith, Jr., national commander, in a recent speech in Cincinnati, at a dinner attended by Legionnaires and business men.

Mr. Galbraith cited the disabled man's problems as the Legion's paramount concern and termed the finding of a satisfactory solution as "one job that is going to be done."

"Woe unto the man," he added, "or the bureau or bureau chief who wilfully stands in the way of paying the honorable obligation the government owes these men. Whoever he is he will have to get out."

He warned against the activities of the I. W. W. and kindred organizations and outlined the position of the Legion as follows:

"The time has come when a line must be drawn between loyal and disloyal Americans. We do not claim to have a monopoly on patriotism but because of our service our loyalty is a little clearer to our hearts and is a little more intense. We intend to crush this thing, if it ever raises its head, that we already have fought and licked."

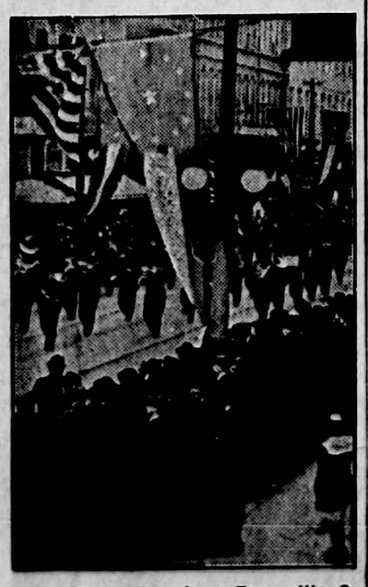

Mr. Galbraith also spoke of the desire of the Legion to unite with the veterans' associations of the allies, in order to promote international amity.

"People accuse us of being overenthusiastic," he said. "They declare that we believe ourselves to be the only patriots. God knows we are not. If we were it would be a sorry day for the nation. We know we have a hundred million associates and we ask them to help us because without their good will and assistance we can accomplish nothing."

MAKE CITY MONUMENT SHINE

Newcastle (Pa.) Legionnaires Quickly Respond When Newspaper "Call" Is Sounded.

An evening newspaper in Newcastle, Pa., published a "story" commenting on the dirty condition of the monument on the public square. The newspaper went to press about four o'clock.

That same evening there was a meeting of Perry S. Gaston post of the American Legion where it was decided to give the old monument a much-needed bath. After the meeting Legionnaires armed themselves with mops and scrub brushes, soap and water and scoured the stones of the monument until they shone.

USEFUL RECIPES FOR HOUSEWIFE

How to Make All Kinds of Yeast and Quick Breads From Variety of Flours.

BREAD, ROLLS AND COOKIES

Bulletin Issued by Department of Agriculture Gives Formulas for Dishes a Little Out of Ordinary—How to Score Bread.

Do you know how to make all kinds yeast and quick breads, or are your efforts confined to the making of white bread and baking-powder biscuits? Do you know whether the bread you make is perfect of its kind or not? If you don't you can learn from Farmers' Bulletin 1136, "Baking in the Home," recently issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, which gives recipes for making all kinds of yeast and quick breads from different kinds of flour, as well as rolls, muffins, pastry, and cookies. Directions for scoring bread, as it is now done at the best fairs, are also included. One of the many excellent features of this bulletin is that the number each recipe will serve is given. This is particularly useful for the inexperienced housekeeper. Some recipes a little out of the ordinary which are to be found in the bulletin follow:

Cornmeal and Pumpkin Dodgers.
(10 to 12 cakes.)

1½ cupfuls cooked pumpkin.
1 teaspoonful salt.
3 tablespoonfuls shortening.
1 or 2 tablespoonfuls sweetening.
1½ cupfuls corn meal.

To the pumpkin, which has been cooked very tender and mashed free from lumps, add the salt, sweetening, melted shortening, and cornmeal, and mix thoroughly. Have the mixture just soft enough to take up by spoonfuls and pat into flat cakes in the hand. Place on a griddle or greased baking sheet and bake for about twenty minutes in a hot oven.

If desired, the cornmeal may be added to the hot pumpkin and allowed to steam with the latter for ten minutes before adding the other ingredients.

Bread Griddle Cakes.
(Serves 5.)

1¼ cupfuls bread crumbs.
1½ cupfuls sweet milk.
½ teaspoonful salt.
1 or 2 teaspoonfuls sweetening, if desired.
1 tablespoonful shortening.
1 egg.
½ cupful flour.
2 teaspoonfuls baking powder.

Scald the milk, add the crumbs, let stand for 15 minutes, then mash and beat to a paste. Add the salt, sweetening, melted shortening, and well-beaten egg. Finally, add the flour and baking powder, which have been sifted together. Bake on a hot griddle until nicely browned on both sides. (In place of baking powder and sweet milk alone, one-half cupful sweet milk may be used to moisten the crumbs and one cupful of sour milk with one-half teaspoonful baking soda for thinning and leavening the mixture.)

Potato Muffins.
(12 to 15 muffins.)

1½ cupfuls wheat flour.
¾ teaspoonful salt.
3 teaspoonfuls baking powder.
1 cupful cooked sweet potato (Irish potatoes may be used instead).
1 or 2 eggs.
2 tablespoonfuls shortening.
Liquid sufficient to make a rather stiff batter (about ½ cupful).

Boil the potatoes in the skins until tender; drain, peel, and mash fine. Putting the potato through a ricer or colander is better than mashing. Sift together the flour, salt, and baking powder. Beat the eggs until light and add to the cool mashed potato. Next add the melted shortening, then the flour mixture, alternating with portions of the liquid, until a batter is formed somewhat stiffer than for ordinary flour muffins. Drop by spoonfuls into greased muffin pans until half-filled and bake for about thirty minutes in a moderately hot oven.

Bread Muffins.
(15 small muffins.)

1½ cupfuls dry bread crumbs.
1 cupful milk.
½ teaspoonful salt.
1 egg.
1 tablespoonful shortening.
1 or 2 tablespoonfuls sweetening.
½ cupful flour.
2 teaspoonfuls baking powder.

Scald the milk, add the crumbs, allow to stand for 15 minutes, then mash and beat to a paste. Add the salt, beaten egg yolk, melted shortening, sweetening, and the flour and baking powder sifted together. Pour into gem pans until half-filled, then bake for about twenty minutes in a moderately hot oven.

Soy-Bean Muffins.
(10 small muffins.)

1 scant cupful soy-bean meal or flour.
1 cupful wheat flour.
¾ teaspoonful baking powder,
2½ teaspoonfuls baking powder,
2-3 cupful raisins, or chopped dates, if desired.
1 or 2 tablespoonfuls sweetening.
1 tablespoonful shortening (melted).
1 egg.
About 1 cup liquid.

Blend the dry materials and add the liquid. Add the fruit, previously dusted with flour. Do not have this batter too soft, as it does not thicken so much in baking as that made with other flours.

PLANS OUTLINED FOR CLEANING FURNITURE

Not Wise to Put Water on Varnished Surfaces.

Vacuum Cleaner or Brush Is Most Effective for Upholstery—Leather Coverings Last Longer and Look Better If Oiled.

The varnish on some furniture is so hard and smooth that finger marks and soiled places may be removed with a cloth wrung out of lukewarm suds made with neutral soap and the finish restored by rubbing with a cloth on which a few drops of light lubricating oil or furniture polish has been sprinkled. In many cases this is a good method to use on the tops of dining tables, but in general it is unwise to put water on varnished, oiled, or waxed surfaces. Painted and enameled furniture may, of course, be washed like any other surface so finished.

For upholstery either a vacuum cleaner or a brush is most effective. A soft brush is best for velvet or velours, a stiffer one for tapestry and other strong, firm materials, and a pointed one for tufted upholstery. If convenient, upholstered furniture should be taken out of doors occasionally and beaten with a flat carpet beater, or it may be cleaned indoors by the following methods: The article to be cleaned is first covered with a cloth that has been dipped in water and wrung as dry as possible, then beaten with a flat beater, the dust being taken up by the damp cloth.

Leather furniture coverings last longer and look better if rubbed occasionally with castor oil or a commercial leather polish to restore the oil that gradually dries out. The liquid should be well rubbed in and any excess wiped off the surface, otherwise this film of oil will collect and hold dirt, which will darken the leather and soil whatever touches it.

Protection for Buttons.

When a garment is put through the wringer protect the buttons by pressing them flat inside the folded garment.

WHOLESOME FOOD FOR CHILD

Liking for Large Range of Foods Is Desirable for Diet and Best Table Manners.

A meal in which all the important kinds of food are represented tends to keep the child in good condition and to give him good habits of eating, food specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture say. The liking for a large range of foods is desirable from the standpoint of diet and also of manners, for it helps to prevent a person from becoming a disagreeable table companion—one who is "fussy" about his food. Meals that are planned carefully help also to give the child some little idea of what those who know most about foods have in mind when they speak of a "balanced"—or, better, a "rightly chosen"—ration. With children it is far more important to suggest the value of such a ration by the character of the meals given to them than to try to tell them what it is or to what extent it has been worked out.

ROBBERS GIVE FREE ADVICE

Lock Drug Store Proprietor, Salesman and Customer in Store and Tell Them How to Succeed.

New York.—Two bandits who in broad daylight robbed a drug store in Central Park West, locking the proprietor, a salesman and a customer in the store when they fled in an automobile, gave their victims free advice while they robbed them.

Producing a revolver, and "breaking" it to show that it was loaded with real bullets, one bandit got the salesman into a state of mind in which he unbuckled his wrist watch for the convenience of the robbers.

Inspecting this victim's possessions, the robber found a union card.

"I see you are a union man," quoth the bandit.

"Yes, I belong to a union at Binghamton," replied the salesman.

"Do you make much money?"

"No, I earn very little."

"Then why don't you get into this business?" asked the bandit. "It's easy work and profitable."

To prove his assertion he relieved the men of their valuables and $200. On the way out the robbers informed a woman who was about to enter that the store was closed for the remainder of the day.

ARMS SMUGGLED TO ITALY

Rome Newspaper Believes They Were Intended for the Tyrolese Militia.

Rome.—The Giornale d'Italia has been conducting an inquiry concerning a sealed truck sent from Berlin to Rome containing, according to the German sender, books and diplomatic documents belonging to the Italian embassy in Berlin. The truck contained 18 cases addressed to the ministry of war, division of the general staff, and bore instructions that they be kept in the railway station in Rome without being opened to await a special envoy from the war ministry.

The newspaper asserts that evidently by this means it was expected the truck would pass the Italian frontier at Kufstein, in the Tyrol, without customs examination, but the Italian officials insisted on opening the cases and found they contained machine guns, cannon, revolvers and field glasses. The Giornale d'Italia came to the conclusion that the arms were destined for the Tyrolese militia, which it says are well known for their anti-Italian feelings.

Armless Mother Made All Her Baby's Clothes

Although she has no arms, Mrs. J. C. Teagarden of Denver, Colo., is able to give her baby the same care that other mothers give and every bit of clothing the baby wears was made by the mother. Physicians and nurses at the hospital where the stork brought little Delphia May were amazed at the facility with which Mrs. Teagarden, born with no arms, cared for her baby, using teeth, feet and shoulders.

Mrs. Teagarden keeps her own house, sews, cooks and makes the beds, and she is able to comb her own hair with a comb held in her toes. Delphia May is a normal child.

Made Hay While He Slept.

Cincinnati.—Joseph D. Englebert, contractor, has a painter who found a drink when sent to town. Becoming leg weary, the painter sat down at the corner of Fifth and Walnut streets. His hat slipped off and fell to his knees and when he was awakened by a policeman the painter found $1.60 in his hat.

What Would He Do With a Million?

Indianapolis.—Arthur C. Newby, who recently inherited a 140-acre farm and $7,000 worth of personal property left by two uncles of Mooresville, has presented the entire estate to the town of Mooresville, the income of which is to be used to erect a memorial to the two men.

Mother's Mistake.

A little girl asked her mother: "Why did you go to the hospital to get me?" Her mother answered: "Because I wanted a nice little girl and you are a nice little girl, are you not?" The little girl, thinking of her baby brother Jack, answered: "Yes, I am a nice little girl, but you made an awful mistake when you went and picked Jack out."

BOX COAT DESERVES PLACE OF HONOR

"WHEN in doubt choose a box coat" might be taken as a safe guide to the purchase of a suit in the late winter. For there is hardly a season within the memory of fashion reporters which has not offered the box coat among its showings of coat suits, therefore the story of the season's suits may very well begin and end with this particular and always chic style. But the box coat is for the woman whose carriage is correct, for the upstanding figure and especially for slenderness.

In the suit pictured, which might be of duvetyn, velours or other suitings in a solid color, the flaring box coat model buttons straight up the front in the most approved of fashions. It has pockets and collar of Australian opossum fur, very becoming and cozy looking, and plain coat sleeves finished at the wrist with two cloth-covered buttons and button holes.

Except for narrow braid in rows, by which the skirt acknowledges an acquaintance with coming spring styles, there is nothing to say of it that is not told by the picture.

In company with this dependably stylish suit, there is an equally efficient coat, as practical and as smart. It is long and double-breasted, has full sleeves and deep, turned-back cuffs with fur border. The belt with sash ends of cloth is given character by handsome silk tassels which match up in smart style the deep cape with three bands of fur for ornament. This cape is the pride and glory of a coat which it elevates into the class of the best models and worn with it is a smart satin hat with ornaments at the front made of ostrich flues.

Niceties of the Toilet

THE woman who gives thought to her coiffure, her hat and her dress accessories is about sure of success in the matter of her toilette, whether it is made for the everyday occupations of life or for high occasions. More than half the battle is won for street dress when the coiffure and hat are all that they should be, and it is the niceties of the costume that give it a flavor which cannot be overlooked. And rather Christmas brought in a large pack of purely personal gifts for many women this year, which is worth while reviewing in order to become acquainted with the mode in accessories. Leaving out jewels of all kinds there are left gloves, hose, fans, bags, neckwear, handkerchiefs, hand bags, veils, umbrellas, scarfs and many other things that give the costume character.

Among fans, those of curled or uncurled ostrich with dark shell sticks, hold the lead as the favorites of fashion. From two to seven plumes, in a variety of colors, are used for making one of these rich belongings and they may be had in jade, orchid, sapphire, turquoise, orange, flesh color, black and red or ordered in any other colors. Another lovely accessory of ostrich feathers, to be worn with evening frocks, appears in bracelets for bare arms, made of ribbon and flues. They are made to be worn on the arm just above the elbow.

Next to handkerchiefs, gloves and neckwear rank in importance, simply because they are so universal. Neckwear is a story by itself, but one of the new items in it appears in the round collar and vestee pictured above. This is made of fine net, Venice lace insertion and Val edging as shown by the photograph and is a simple matter for the home needle worker to handle. It is to be made by hand.

In gloves, washable varieties for street wear find ever-increasing favor, white doeskin fastening with pearl buttons standing at the peak of daintiness. They are rivalled by gray cloth gloves of a suede-like texture, woven with lining in a contrasting tint and fastened with strap and slide. Gauntlet and slip-on styles are in great demand. A very handsome pair of French glace kid is shown in the picture with Van Dyck points and back stitching in black. White gloves are often finished with tan or beige instead of black and divide honors with gray gloves in popularity.

VEILS IN DEMAND

Decoration for Milady's Hat at Height of Popularity.

Countless Ways of Draping and Each One Is Very Much in the Mode.

The enthusiasm over veils continues unabated. It has reached the point where it might also be termed a frenzy. Women have taken veils so seriously that they spend hours adjusting them.

Never in the history of the world has the veil been in such high favor. The matter of draping it has come to be an art. There are countless ways and each one very much in the mode. This is one part of dress in which women may be individual. The more so, the better. Just as no two people draw alike, no two do any piece of drapery in the same way, and this applies to veils.

The day when the veil was worn just as its name implies, as something to shadow the faces and flatter the wearer by concealing any traces of weariness or to soften the effect of rouge and powder, has passed. While it is still worn for these purposes, its principal role today is that of a graceful piece of drapery.

It would never be possible to put one's personality into the wearing of a hat or dress as into the wearing of a veil. Every woman has a deft little way of her own in its arrangement. In this the greatest originality prevails.

The flowing veil may be of almost any length. Some veils hang almost to the bottom of the skirt and many well down around the hips. At the front they may merely conceal the orbs, come just over the nose, or fall to the knees.

Hats of bright colors or beautiful light shades of brown are shadowed by huge black chantilly lace veils.

Embroidered tulle takes its place with the laces and the nets of hexagon mesh. The color of the veil is a matter to be given consideration. Black is the favorite. Then come browns and the shade known as blond. Very little white is used. When it appears at all it is among the novelties. Women have been known, in their devotion to this fashion, to appear in white veils that reach to their knees.

CHIC CHAPEAU WINS FAVOR

Those who know assert this hat is one of the prettiest to make its appearance. It is not lavish but it is neat. It is black satin and is trimmed with downward pointing black wings.

One of the Newer Colors.

Ming green is one of the newer greens in favor, and green continues to be very fashionable.

TO FACE THE WINTRY WINDS

Chic turban; a tailleur of blue veldyne with collar and huge cuffs of opossum, set off with smart strapped walking shoes with reasonable heels, comprise this shopping outfit.

FASHION NOTES

Tailored suits have wide cuffs.

Brilliant colors prevail in wraps.

Lingerie makes much use of ribbons.

Gray will be a favorite color for spring.

Costumes are flat and tight at the back.

Evening headdresses have disappeared.

Paisley effects in trimming are returning.

New fur coats are cut on redingote lines.

Scarlet enamel buttons appear on a gray coat.

White pelican is a smart trimming for hats.

Many coats are a combination of fur and velvet.

Tailored blouses are made of crepe de chine.

The bodice of crepe molds snugly to the figure.

Novel dresses in stiff moire have appeared in Paris.

A combination of gray and green is favored in suits.

White blouses have collars and cuffs of solid color.

Multicolored striped taffeta trims a serge dress.

Round and scarf veils are replacing the square veils.

The long-waisted bodice may give the tunic effect.

An imitation leather fabric is used to line topcoats.

Black lace over taffeta is a favored combination.

Triangular-shaped panels are a new whim of fashion.

Fur-faced and cut brims are smart millinery notes.

Black serge is embroidered in white porcelain beads.

LINES OF THE WINTER MODE

Same General Style Is Found in the Frocks of Majority of the Couturiers.

Once again one may speak of the lines of the mode, since fashionable designers have decided to agree upon one particular style, writes a fashion correspondent in the Milwaukee Sentinel. Indeed, the close harmony between the different large dressmaking houses is one of the most striking features of the winter season, Last year at this time it was almost impossible to get a clear idea of the new fashions. Each designer went his own way, and a woman apparently could dress according to her type without worrying about the rest.

Now all this is reversed, and the same general lines are found in the frocks of all the couturiers. A black velvet afternoon dress from Worth will serve as a good example of the new trend of fashion.

The waistline of this frock is long and supple, and the narrow underskirt is a good deal longer than those of last year. Three rather broad panels fringed with monkey fur almost sweep the ground, especially behind, where they are slightly longer. The skirt is almost covered by these panels, which when they are lifted gracefully in walking, have the happy way of getting the eyes accustomed to the longer skirts.

The very high collar, so high that it entirely covers the chin, is another characteristic of the winter's models. There are no whalebones in evidence, however. The collars are held in place simply by their cut, being rather tight and very high.

The sleeves of the aforementioned frock are also typical. They are very long, so long that they form folds and are pushed back by the hands, over which they fall, thus making them appear smaller and whiter.

One French designer does not wish to lose the opportunity of contrasting the white skin of madame with the black velvet, so he cuts a slit in the front of the bodice, which gives a lighter appearance to the whole dress. Smart frocks from all the fashionable houses make good use of these gashes or openings. Sometimes the slashings are found in the collars, sometimes on the shoulders and sometimes on the long, tight sleeves.

Ostrich Fancies.

One can buy any sort of ostrich fancy. There is ostrich fringe by the yard in every color in and out of the rainbow. There are little ostrich fluffs to wear on hats and to use as the finishing touch on evening frocks. There are all sorts of plumes in every state of curl and uncurl, and again in every color in the world.

Plaid Stockings.

Winter sport stockings are shown in interesting plaids. The blocks forming the plaids are placed, as one might say, bias of the stocking—diamonds, really, ranged side by side. The effect is excellent.

Metal Effects Popular.

Metal effects in millinery trimmings are very popular and many greenish-blue tones, something on the peacock order but with a number of brand-new names, are in the limelight.

LAKE SHORE PARK

Lake Shore Park and vicinity was again aroused by a happy throng of joy seekers at New Year's D. A. Brown Jr. gave a house party to 12 young folks from neighboring towns, which proved to be a great success. Fine skating and ice boating was enjoyed by all for the four days they were there. A fatality nearly occurred when one of the boys, unaware of a pet rabbit being kept by Henry T. Dobson, tried and nearly succeeded in shooting said pet rabbit. Bunny escaped, however, unscratched. The New Year was welcomed by a quiet and very impressive bugle call by an accomplished member. The party consisted of Margery Field, Midge Prentiss from Brookline, Thelma Hickey from Attleboro, Barbara Taylor from Washington, D. C. The boys were Draper Hill, Chandler Woods, Don and Theodore Robbins and Henry Taintor of Brookline. The party was chaperoned by Mrs. Robbins. This is the second year that Whitman's pond has furnished amusement for a bunch of college folk over the much-heralded date, New Year's.

NEW YEAR PARTY

Friday evening, Dec. 31, the Y. P. S. U. of the Union Congregational church of Weymouth and East Braintree held a New Year party.

From 8 o'clock until 10 o'clock a large and appreciative audience viewed the motion picture: "The Lit the Shepherd of Kingdom Come", with Jack Pickford starring. This is a noted picture and as it depicted the delightful Southern life prior to and during the Civil War, also the wonderful Cumberland mountain country, it is not hard to imagine what a fascinating story the cinema produced.

At 10 o'clock the guests were invited to the banquet hall, where to strains of music, a gay and festive procession of young people in costume and masks marched around the hall. It was a curious lot of spectators who tried to make out the ones in costume.

There were gay dominoes, summer girls in organdie frocks and picturesque straw hats, peasant girls, gallant knights in knee-breeches and silk stockings, a young man in riding togs, a young woman as "Spring", a dainty maid in uniform and many other unique outfits.

J. Herbert Walsh, with white duck trousers and a dress-suit coat, a tiny rod cap perched on his head and immaculate white gloves, led the march with Miss Emma Harris in a white muslin gown dotted with silver stars. Bringing up the rear were Herbert Poore with a long linen duster and straw hat, and Mrs. J. Herbert Walsh in Colonial costume with a grandma's lace cap and rare old lace shawl.

The matrons were: Mrs. C. Lincoln Abbott, Mrs. J. Herbert Walsh and Mrs. Charles G. Jordan, all three in Colonial costumes.

Dancing was then enjoyed with an occasional duet by the Misses MacDowal, and a solo by Miss MacDowal. Miss Dorothy Avery presided at the organ throughout the motion picture and also played the piano for the dancing. Her costume was that of a Geisha girl and she looked very attractive.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Chadbourne, Mrs. Studley, Miss Louise Harris, Miss Emma Harris and other members of the Y. P. S. U. A fine of five cents was imposed on everyone who came without a mask which caused much merriment.

At five minutes of 12 all the company joined in singing "Auld Lang Syne" and at the stroke of 12, after a noisy welcome to the New Year, everyone wished everyone else a Happy New Year.

NO LICENSE VOTE

City and Town Clerks were notified by the Secretary of State this week that because of the codification of the laws there will be no necessity of placing on the ballot in 1921 the question of granting licenses to sell intoxicating liquor.

Although the adoption of the prohibition amendment did away with the issuing of licenses to sell intoxicating liquor the question has annually appeared on the ballots.

The Shadow of the Sheltering Pines

A New Romance of the Storm Country

By GRACE MILLER WHITE

TONY—ANOTHER TESS.

"Lean against me, dear," murmured Philip. "And this time—oh, Tony, don't leave me today without telling me you love me a lot."

Tony glimpsed him with one little upward glance. Her eyes were star-bright.

"I love you more'n the whole world," she trembled. "More'n I know how to tell."

This confession of love comes right in the middle of this fascinating story; there's a lot of exciting action ahead of it and still more after it before Tonnibel Pendlehaven gets everything the world can give to one little girl.

This is another of the thrilling stories by Grace Miller White of the "storm country" of New York state. It was "Tess of the Storm Country" that made Mary Pickford Fairbanks famous and Tony is another Tess. Over 1,000,000 copies of the author's romances have been sold in book form and motion pictures have made her name a household word.

CHAPTER I.

"Tony"—For Short.

Another winter had lifted its icy fingers from the Storm Country and Lake Cayuga, and an early spring had brought from the South the red-breasted robins and thousands of other birds to build their homes in the Forest city, as Ithaca, N. Y., is well called, for to the south, the east, the west, and even to the north where the lake cut sharply around a corner, broad forests stretched their lengths and heights of leaf and bough on miniature mountains.

One evening on the western side of the railroad tracks, a girl stood before a small building over which, like ropes of green, draped the branches of a weeping willow tree. This building was different from any of the other habitations near it in that it was well painted, and the door stood open all day.

'Twas a strange little girl that gazed up with searching eagerness at the two lighted signs that had arrested her attention. In her arms she held a diminutive guinea pig, and the way she hugged it close demonstrated her love for it.

"THE SALVATION ARMY," she spelled out and thoughtfully considered it.

"Everybody is welcome here," she read slowly. That meant that anyone could enter if he wanted to, she decided, and as Tonnibel Devon did want to go in, she softly tiptoed up the steps and peeped into the room. As there was nobody in sight, she sidled in and looked about.

"Welcome" was curved in letters of red above a table, and the silent young stranger sighed. She couldn't understand how a girl could be really welcome anywhere. Of course her mother liked her and missed her when she was away, but Tony knew of no other place where she was really wanted but the canal boat, called Mary and Dirty Mary for short, which had been her home ever since she could remember.

"Glory be to God in the highest," swung in letters of gold across the right wall, and to the left, "Stand Still and See the Salvation of the Lord," kept her attention a little longer. She didn't know what they meant, but the varied colors shining brilliant in the bright light calmed her turbulent spirit and made her happy. She hugged the pig closer, bent her head and kissed the top of its ear.

"I guess we're in a church, Gussie," she said aloud, "and you mustn't grunt or squeal like you do on the Dirty Mary. It's awful nice and quiet, ain't it, honey?"

"Were you speaking to me?" said a voice from near the door.

Tonnibel Devon struggled to her feet, turned around and saw a young man looking at her. A flame of red rushed over the tanned skin, but because he was smiling and kindly, she smiled back, a dimple coming to life at each corner of her mouth.

"Nope," she flung out in confusion. "I was talkin' to Gussie-Piglet here. Mebbe her and me hadn't ought to be here. You can kick us out if you want to."

Philip MacCauley, the captain of the Salvation army in Ithaca, bowed, and then he laughed.

"Every one is welcome here," he quoted, coming forward. "Where'd you come from? I've never seen you before."

"I'm staying up Hoghole way," replied Tony. "I ain't been around Ithaca long. This is an awful nice room, ain't it, huh?"

"Yes, very. We like it," replied the young man. "Sit down; don't be in a hurry. I want to talk to you."

Tonnibel did sit down but not very comfortably. She was embarrassed in the presence of this handsome young stranger, abashed in the glamor of his uniform, and all the beauty of him.

With boyish admiration he was contemplating the sparkle of her gray eyes, shaded by long lashes as ebony black as her hair which hung in ringlets to her waist. He decided that she was very pretty, and that he liked to have her in the Salvation army quarters.

"Can't you stay for meeting this evening?" he asked presently. "We have singing here."

Tony's eyes deepened almost to lustrous black.

"Oh, I'd love that!" Then she shook her head. "Nope," she went on, "I got to go home to mummy. She's all alone! Mebbe when my daddy gets back, I'll come some time and sit clean through the night."

For an instant the smile stayed about the boy's lips, then gravity settled once more over his earnest young face.

"What's done in this place?" she questioned after a while.

"Oh, we sing and read and pray," replied the boy. "We do everything we can to help people. There's such a lot of misery in the world."

"That's as true's you're born," came back promptly from the parted red lips. "I know that because my mother is sick every day, and she cries too. That's misery, ain't it?"

Captain MacCauley was used to tales of woe, but he knew a panacea for them. "Yes, it is so," he said. "Perhaps you could get her to come here some evening! Do you think you could?"

"Daddy wouldn't let her," was the reply, and she lifted unfathomable saddened gray eyes to his. "You see when a man owns a woman, and she don't do the things he tells her to, he beats her, huh?"

There was mute pleading in her expression as she drew back on the bench a little farther away from him.

Side by Side They Sat Together on the Bunk.

Ah! He might have known that she had been swept along by the relentless tide of brutality. He sighed a little. He had seen enough of ignorant men with their supreme egotism, to know she told the truth.

"Your father is—is—cruel to your mother, then?" he faltered.

She remained in deep thought for the space of a few seconds.

"A swat or two, mebbe more, ain't a killin' thing to women folks," was the response she made confusedly at length.

So unusual had been her answer that Philip MacCauley gazed at her in amazement.

"Have you ever heard of—of God?" he asked finally, his own confusion apparent in the stumble of his tongue.

Tonnibel laughed.

"I hear God d—n more'n a hundred times a day," she replied. "Is that what you mean?"

"Not quite," answered Philip, startled. "No! Not that."

"Then what?" demanded Tony. "What kind of a God do you mean?"

"One that is good," explained Philip. "There isn't any God but the one who helps—"

"My mummy?" breathed the girl, misty tears shadowing her eyes.

"Yes."

"Where is he, then?" The words shot forth with such insistence that something within Philip MacCauley rose to its demand.

"Some one's got to be good to my mother," the girl ran on before he could speak. "She's sick—and lonely. Oh, I've got to do something for her. Where's your helpin' God, mister?"

"Right here in this place," said Philip, a strange emotion sweeping over him. "In fact there isn't any place where God is not."

"He wouldn't come in a dirty canal boat, would He?" demanded Tony, breathlessly.

Astonished at such crudeness, Captain MacCauley shifted himself about so he faced her squarely. Was it pretended ignorance or innocence in the searching gray eyes? Then he decided that truth was stamped on every line of the upturned face.

"Of course, everywhere," he exclaimed brokenly. "Why, dear child—"

Tony Devon interrupted him swiftly. "Tell me how to manage it," she pleaded. "How can I wheedle your God to the Dirty Mary?"

"To the what?" was the question the boy asked in shocked swiftness.

"The Dirty Mary," repeated Tony. "My mummy and me live on a canal boat. Once she were just called 'Mary.' But she's so d—d nasty, Ede calls her the Dirty Mary. She's a nice boat just the same as long as my mummy's there. But I can't see how a clean God could come on 'er. . . . I guess you're foolin' me, mister."

Philip swallowed hard. Then slowly and gently he talked to [illegible] trying to make her understand as [illegible] he could what he meant by God, Spirit.

"And you can help your mother, little—what's your name?"

"Tony, just Tonnibel," she mumbled. Then her voice rose and she uttered sharply, "Now tell me how to help my mother."

Philip went to the altar and sorted out a small card.

"This," he said, coming back to her, "has happy, loving thoughts written on it. If you think these things all the time—oh, how they will help both you and your mother."

Wonderingly she took it in her fingers. The first thing that met her eyes was a beautiful uplifted face of a man and in his arms was a little lamb. Underneath the picture was printed, "Feed my sheep," and directly under that were the words, "Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." Once more her eyes sought the face above, a face wherein lay all the pity and love in the world.

Tony Devon caught a glimpse of the lesson he was trying to teach, and when she went out of the Salvation army hall she held within the depths of her a wonderfully new and utterly strange emotion.

She was panting for breath when she ran up the gangplank of the canal boat.

A woman was busy brewing tea when the girl slipped down the steps of the cabin.

"You been gone a long time, Tony," mumbled Mrs. Devon. "Did you see anything of your daddy?"

"Nope, and I squinted in every beer hole in Ithaca," Tony replied, "but—but—but I found out something for you. Listen! There's somebody in this boat besides me, and you—and Gussie.'"

"Who?" came sharply from the woman.

She shivered, fearing that the law lay in wait for her absent husband.

"Who, brat?" she repeated imploringly.

Tonnibel bent over and looked straight into the sad, wan face.

"God, just a plain lovin' God!" she replied, her countenance expressing unusual exaltation. "Sit a mute while the tea's makin' good, and I'll tell you."

Side by side they sat together on the bunk while with lowered reverent voice the girl told the story of the Shepherd who had said long ago ith infinite pity, "Feed my sheep."

"And mummy," the girl continued, leaning her head against her mother's arm, "Darling mummy, that beautiful man said, 'Love'd make crooked things straight,' and—and it's so."

A look of unbelief came over Edith Devon's face.

"Fiddle," she said in a disgusted voice. "Tony, you ain't a brain in your bean."

"I don't need any brains as long as I got this, Edie," the girl replied, lifting the card she held. "Come on, let me say these things over. Here's one that'll keep—well, it'll help keep daddy from beatin' you."

Mrs. Devon grasped the girl's arm in sudden frenzy.

"You told some one Uriah beat me?" she demanded sharply.

"Mebbe I did, and mebbe I didn't," answered Tony, slyly, "but these here words about standin' still and watching Salvation slam good all about will keep pappy's fists up his sleeves. Say it, Edie," she ended.

"I won't," said Edith, getting up swiftly. "If there's anything in it, Tony, you can show me by gettin' your daddy back home. Mebbe he's in jail."

"Even if he was," retorted the girl, with a wise shake of her head, "lovin' hard could make the coop-doors fly wide open, and daddy'd flop out like a dogfish flops into the lake. I'm goin' to find out more some of these days, and then I'll tell you all about it. Huh, mummy?"

"Yes," muttered Edith, "but I'm getting a guess out of the days I spent on this boat that God, or whoever you're talkin' about, ain't botherin' his head over the Dirty Mary, nor us uther."

"Uriah, if you go on with this, I'll tell 'er all I know."

THE AVOCADO OR ALLIGATOR PEAR.

For many years the avocado has been brought to this country from Mexico, and in limited number has been in the markets of late from north to south. Even now the demand for the fruit at almost prohibitive prices, far exceeds the supply. Experimenters have tested to their satisfaction that this much prized fruit can be produced commercially in a wide area of territory and they are busy developing an industry that gives much promise. The avocado belongs to the laurel family and is a native of tropical and semi-tropical America. The tree is large and spreading, its leathery leaves of a spicy taste and odor. The bay tree, whose leaves are used largely for seasoning, belongs to the laurel family. The fruit of the avocado varies in shape from round to pear-shaped, with color from green to deep purple, weighing from a few ounces up to five pounds. It contains a large single seed around which is a thick creamy yellow and green-colored flesh, of delightful nutty flavor. The thick-skinned fruit is more often shipped, as it carries well. It has been said of the avocado that it is in a class by itself. It is a natural combination of food-fruit and oil. It averages 984 calories, or heat units per pound, more than twice the maximum calories of the best fresh fruits. Its fuel value corresponds to 75 per cent of that of cereals. Its chief value however is in its fat content, which in some cases is as high as 28 to 30 per cent. The only fruit comparable to it is the olive and that is a processed fruit. The increase in population, making land too valuable merely for producing meat, makes the production of such a substitute worthy of consideration.

In Mexico a salad of the pear is used as follows: Cut the fruit in dice after peeling and add to two parts of the fruit one part of Bermuda onion, chopped fine, and a small sweet pepper. Prepare two hours before serving. Season with salt, pepper and vinegar.

In Santiago.—Peel the fruit, remove the seed and cut in cubes. Mix with mayonnaise, sprinkle with the yolk of hard cooked egg put through a sieve. Such a salad should constitute a meal, with the fat of the fruit, in the dressing and in the yolk of the egg.

Havana Paste.—Take the meat of three avocados, add three tomatoes, half a green pepper cut into fine shreds. Crush and pound this mass to a paste. Add a little onion juice, lime juice and salt. Mix thoroughly and serve at once.

Avacado au Natural.—Remove the skin and slice the fruit. Serve on a plate garnished with celery hearts, tomato or sweet red peppers. To be eaten with a fork with or without salt and pepper, as preferred.

If you'd make life worth livin'
Try these big things worth while;
They're three (I'll sum 'em up ag'in),
Jest love an' work an' smile.

A DAY OF SAUCES.

A sauce as an accompaniment to a dish is as essential as the ordinary seasoning of salt and pepper to make a dish appetizing. A very ordinary dish with a piquant and appropriate sauce has made many a chef and hotel famous. Certain foods need certain sauces. A lamb roast with mint sauce, pork roast with apple sauce, turkey with cranberry, are always associated. Veal without a snappy tomato sauce, or one of onion, is usually flat and tasteless. Boiled mutton is improved by a caper sauce and currant jelly with a roast. With venison a spiced grape jelly is especially appropriate, and wild duck needs a tart jelly or a salad of sliced oranges. Wild rice is excellent and most appropriate to serve with wild duck. Fish, too, of any kind is always better served with a sauce. Oyster sauce is one which may be used with any kind. Bechamel and brown sauce are good fish sauces. Lemon and egg sauces are good with some kinds of fish. Wild fowl is especially good with:

Ripe Olive Sauce.—Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add a sliced onion and cook until slightly brown. Remove the onion and stir the butter until brown. Add five and one-half tablespoonfuls of flour, a teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of pepper and stir to a smooth paste. Add two cupfuls of brown stock gradually and continue the boiling, stirring constantly. Cut the meat from a dozen ripe olives, cover with boiling water and cook for five minutes. Drain and add the sauce.

WASP

THE U. S. S. Wasp had a transient glory about her that was almost modern.

She flitted into being in April, 1814, and buzzed out during the fall of the same year.

There was a first Wasp in the war of 1812. This second one was smaller but better built. Her 509 tons made her little more than an overgrown yacht.

She was armed with 20 sawed-off 32 pounders and a pair of lean 12-pounders. Cutting loose all together she could hurl the tremendous broadside of 315 pounds of metal—or about the weight of one modern 8-inch shell!

Captain "Johnnie" Blakeley took her out on May 1, 1814. He wasted no time but headed straight for the English channel. In six weeks he had cleaned up enough prizes to retire on a chicken farm.

But Johnnie was not the retiring kind or we shouldn't have named one of our late destroyers after him.

On June 28 H. M. S. Reindeer hove in sight. With Lapplandish pertinacity the Wasp perched on the Reindeer's haunch and stung her venomously.

But the Reindeer was known as the "Pride of Portsmouth," so she bucked and kicked and fetched other vicious efforts to dislodge her adversary. Her skipper Capt. William Manners, leaped into the rigging and gallantly promulgated a boarding party over the rail of the Wasp, which had come alongsides.

Followed a unanimous and successful prohibition movement amongst the Americans.

Bill Manners and 67 of his crew and officers were killed or wounded. The ship's clerk was the only officer left to surrender.

Thence the Wasp sailed to France to recoup. She did it so well that soon after leaving port she attacked a convoy of ten vessels escorted by the 74-gun ship-of-the-line Armada. With sentimental partiality she cut out the brig Mary, captured valuable military stores and escaped.

With her blood still up she fell in with H. M. S. Avon. After a running fight of two hours in the darkness of night the enemy surrendered. The Avon's mainsail fell over her after guns and blanketed their fire.

At the moment the Britisher surrendered several more of the enemy hove up over the horizon, Capt. Blakeley prudently beat it.

On Sept. 21 the brig Atlanta was taken. She was the fifteenth prize. October 9 the Wasp fell in with a Swedish brig and was reported for the last time. She was never seen nor heard of again.

DEVIATION

I CAN'T vouch for this tale. I wouldn't if I could. If there's any vouching to be done a sailor must save it for his own tales. To the nautical raconteur Truth is an abortion of scientific intrigue calculated to put the bug on romance and adventure.

It is true, however, that a compass needle is of weak and vacillating character. Let so much as a bally hunk of low-caste iron approach the binnacle bowl and our high-priced guide becomes a creature of decidedly easy virtue. The needle abandons its straight and narrow north-south line and submits to the magnetic charms of a baser metal.

Deviation is the name of the needle's sin. On a steel vessel each compass points out of true. Though magnets are arranged about it to compensate for action of surrounding metal, there is always a small error. This error is deviation.

Vitally important to a skipper is it to know the amount of error. Also must he be familiar with what nearby beams and braces cause most of it.

For instance one of the Canadian patrols—so the tale goes—had a wooden cargo boom secured just forward of her bridge. The heel fitting on the boom was of steel. So near the steering compass was this piece that when a gale swept the forecastle clear, taking boom and all, there was some 12 degrees change in the compass error.

Perhaps it was youth, or maybe optimism in the captain that kept him from worrying. Or it may have been that he was bound up to Sydney, his home port. Or it may even have been that he was going to see his wife. Some sailors are that way.

At any rate he kept on in spite of rain and fog and snow and sleet. No moon, nor sun, nor stars to guide him. His dead reckoning had to do.

He crawled into a "hole in the wall," which a harbor is like in thick weather. And though it was late he went ashore.

Somehow the dock looked unfamiliar. The street beyond curved the wrong way. Certainly there was something queer about the lights.

Suddenly he encountered a woman. It was his wife. But why should she have her new suit on as he discerned by the glow of a shop window.

"What are you doing here?" she exclaimed.

"Going home, of course."

She led him into a strange house and said strange things to strange people. His head whirled. He tried to remember if he had had more than one glass of grog at the landing.

Ten minutes he sat in a kind of trance. Then someone mentioned St. John's. He leaped to his feet. "The boom—the compass deviation!" he cried. "It's Newfoundland I've hit."

They thought him crazy, but in fact it was his compass that had gone looney. He had missed Sydney by just three hundred miles!

BON HOMME RICHARD

AN OLD STORY, yes. But I bet you didn't know she won her battle with a bucket!

She was the flagship of our first J. P. who was known by foreigners as "that pirate."

John Paul Jones named her after the Almanac published by a certain B. Franklin. The latter's influence in France made it possible for Americans to fit out a squadron of reprisal against the British.

In the summer of 1779 five American men-of-war crossed under Jones' command. After painting the Scotch coast red they fell in with an English fleet. For rather obscure reasons only two ships chose to engage, H. M. S. Serapis and the U. S. S. Bon Homme Richard.

The British was a first rate ship-of-the-line while the Richard was an old converted Indiaman. The Serapis could throw 600 pounds of projectiles to the Richard's 444 pounds. Crews were of nearly equal size.

At the first broadside the Richard's big 18-pounders burst and smeared their crews along the decks or splattered them on the crossbeams overhead. Besides this disaster the swift Serapis cross Jones' bow and raked him fore and aft, which in those days was as good as a home run in the ninth inning with three men on.

At this point of the combat the Limey captain staged a famous incident by his fatuous inquiry: "Has your ship struck?" To which, as every schoolboy knows, Jones replied: "I have not yet begun to fight."

So they went at it again. And they got all ta[illegible] with each other. Finally they just hung together and drifted. Yankee riflemen in the tops drove the British crew below. British gunners between decks fired through the sides of their own vessel to puncture the enemy's.

Then came a Scot, a Yankee Scot, with a bucket. He filled his bucket with bombs. He added a pinch of common combustibles. He slid out on the yardarm overhanging the Serapis. He threw a match into his bucket, dropped the bucket down the hatch beneath, and beat it.

Followed a puff and a flame and a bang, a great big boom of a bang. This disaster took all the spunk out of the enemy. After a few boarding brawls the finish came.

The Richard was sinking and on fire; her decks were gory and her sides like sieves. But she was saved; and John Paul Jones became the hero of two continents.

BATTLE STATIONS

HOW do you pick a man?

By his face—yes. And figure—sometimes. His actions—mostly. His thoughts—when you are sure they are his. But there is one more method. Great statesmen like Gladstone, and others like T. R. have known and used it. Sure to the mark is: how a man waits. Not just his patience. Watch all of him while he's waiting.

The fleet leaves port for maneuvers. Complete war watches are kept on the job all the time. Submarines are the greatest immediate peril. In the course of a few days an actual war zone is reached; that is, an area in which the enemy may be lurking. Or suspicious smoke appears on the horizon.

"Signal general quarters," is the admiral's quick decision.

"Aye aye, sir," from the flag lieutenant. Flags flutter for a brief space, are answered down the column, then drop to the signal boards. On every ship alarms clang. Bugles take up the emergency call. On each superdreadnaught the whole ship's company flies to battle stations.

Primarily this means that each officer and man shall roost where the ship's station bill provides for him to meet the enemy in time of battle. Captain in conning tower, surgeon in sick bay, gunner at gun, engineer in engine room, and so on.

All very pretty for a drill. But suppose the enemy actually is near. Or it turns out that the hostile fleet is creeping just behind the horizon. Then it's all hands stick to their stations. They must not leave if powder is out. Nor if the other fellow is close enough to take a pot shot pretty soon. Nor if destroyers might dart in under cover of fog or darkness. It's stick to stations for all hands.

Broadsides are not bad. There is room enough to sit and to stretch one's legs; and perhaps, if the division officer is not too near, to get a little 'shut-eye.' In turrets, though, the confinement soon grows irksome.

More Eggs or Money Back!

The Purina System of Feeding keeps the flock laying in the fall and the winter, because it supplies plenty of material for whites as well as for yolks. This enables the hen to make complete eggs of all the yolks that develop in her body.

When a grain ration is fed there is not enough protein for whites. Many yolks that form are not laid, but are eventually absorbed back into the system as fat.

More-Eggs Guarantee

Purina Chows, when fed according to directions, are guaranteed to make hens lay more eggs than any other feed, or the money paid for Purina Chows will be refunded.

JUSTICE

Even after the heavy snowfall of ballots last November, one of the Democratic leaders still desires to postpone that tardy justice that is due our ex-service men. The answer of the National Commander of American Legion F. W. Galbraith, to Secretary Houston's testimony before Senate Finance Committee, is quoted below:

"Secretary Houston's whole presentation of the matter", he asserted, "was misleading and designed to frighten the country into a repudiation of its obligation to ex-service men. The general impression was conveyed by his testimony that the passage of the adjusted compensation bill would entail the immediate appropriation of billions of dollars by the government and seriously cripple the financial condition of the treasury at the present time.

"The facts are that appropriations necessary to carry out all features of the bill except that of cash compensation would be negligible for this year and for several years to come and that appropriations for cash compensation are not asked until July, 1921, and are to be spread over a period of two years."

A CITY IN BUSINESS

When San Francisco decided, a few years ago, to exchange a worthless political administration of municipal affairs for one founded on business principles, her people paved the way for the entry of red-blooded men in civil life. One of these is Mayor James Rolph Jr., the central figure of an organization whose single aim is service y and for the people.

A great many things have happened in San Francisco since that time, not the least among them being the acquisition of a municipal traction system, which is just now attracting widespread attention, because its cost is the least, five cents, its service is the best and its wage scale is the highest of any city in the country.

One can ride fifteen miles for five cents in San Francisco or five miles farther than from Dedham to Boston, a trip which costs New Englanders today 20 cents, and if one is a school pupil, the cost on the Pacific coast is cur squarely in two.

This city-owned transportation system was not acquired outright. It was built from the ground up, built on business principles all the way, and there is not now, nor has there ever been, a political job in the entire system. Every employee is under civil service rules, and no employee receives less than five dollars per day. And the system has not only paid its way, but it has created a sinking fund which is rapidly retiring the bonded indebtedness, as well as meeting all demands for extensions and upkeep. So much for a city in business.—Dedham Transcript.

DAN HOWLEY SELECTED

The confidence Ty Cobb, recently appointed manager of the Detroit Tigers, holds in the ability of Dan Howley of Weymouth as a handler of pitchers is indicated in the announcement made by the "Georgia Peach" that he will leave the matter of looking after the moundsmen wholly in charge of Hartford's manager the past Eastern League campaign.

Howley will have his own way as regards the pitchers without the slightest interference on his part, says Cobb. That the famous player, who will make his bow as manager next season, is elated at the engaging of Howley as his assistant is gathered from the following, which appeared in the Detroit Free Press the day following the announcement that Dan would coach the Tiger hurlers:

"Indications that Ty Cobb doesn't intend to overlook any bets to enhance the cause of his athletes when the next campaign opens are manifested in an announcement from the baseball office that Dan Howley, coach of the Bengal pitchers in 1919 has been re-engaged by the Georgian to handle the moundsmen next year.

Much of the success achieved by the Tiger pitchers in the race preceding the last disastrous nightmare was due, Cobb went on record with a statement to the efficient methods propounded by Howley, who, for reasons that cannot be explained, was dismissed by Jennings when the season closed.

On assuming the duties as manager, however, it was Cobb's first act to impress Navin with Howley's real value in the duties he dispatched and the man whom Jack Coombs succeeded, will in turn succeed Coombs.

One feature that will help Howley is his popularity with the Tigers. Without exception Dan is held in high esteem by the players and he associates with them constantly. Coombs was just reverse. He didn't hold the respect of his charges and often it was felt that Coombs, because of his preference to stand aloof from the rest of the men, with the exception of Jennings, off the field, it was taken as a measure adopted by him to erect a social barrier."

EDISON COMPANY HEARING

Some of the residents of North Weymouth are agitated because they see an alleged attempt on the part of the Edison Electric Illuminating Co. to close Monatiquot street as a travelled way, and also an attempt to claim the flats adjacent to New Downer Landing between high water and low water mark. In the Gazette of Dec. 31 and also this week is the advertisement for a Land Court hearing for Jan. 24, which should be read carefully by interested parties. It will be observed that the boundary lines as set forth are on the "easterly" side of Monatiquot street. The sixth paragraph relates to this taking of the flats of the Weymouth Fore river. Unless objection is raised at the hearing Jan. 4, action will thereafter be barred.

HONOR FOR CANADA

Wins Championships at International Live Stock Show.

Splendid Exhibits, Both of Animals and Grain, Won Admiration of Judges and Spectators.

One of the most interesting sights at the International Live Stock show at Chicago was the evening parades of horses and cattle. As the Canadian section of these parades came into view, and as it passed around the ring, there was continued applause. There were two or three reasons for this, the principal one being that in this section there were the wonderful Clydesdales, the Belgians and the Percherons that had carried off championships and first prizes. The province of Saskatchewan had a splendid display of Clydesdales and showed in a number of classes, and in every class they got in the money. A remarkable and noted winning was that of the University of Saskatchewan, showing "Lady Bruce," female Clydesdale, in a class of 24 and taking second. In competition there were entries from such famous studs as Conyngham Bros. of Wilkesbarre, P. L. James of Easton, Mass., and George Chiett of the same state. She was beaten by an imported mare, but was later made champion American-bred mare and reserve grand champion, an honor never before conferred upon anything but an imported animal.

The following are some of the good things that Canada won at the International, in a fair fight and no favors. Grand championship for Clydesdale stallions; championship for American-bred Clydesdale mares; reserve senior and reserve grand championships for Clydesdale mares; grand championship for Southdown sheep; sweepstakes grand championship for wheat for the continent of America; championship for Durum wheat for America.

Another of the reasons for the applause given the Canadian sections of the parade was the heartiness with which the American spirit was imbued that impelled it to greet with the fullest appreciation the efforts of the winner, and the hundreds of Canadians in the immense audience of the amphitheater appreciated it.

The purpose that Canada had in making exhibits from their farms, whether it was of live stock—and they had it there in all branches—grains, grasses or roots, was to demonstrate that the war had not created devastation, that the country was alive with interest in the matter of production and that it had ability to produce in a manner that would bring it championships, and what better place than the International, where it would be placed before thousands, many of whom, with the enlightenment thus gained and with a desire to better their condition, would be made to realize that in the neighboring country to the north there was an opportunity that it might be of advantage to them to embrace.—Advertisement.

Different.

"Savages used to paint their faces."

"It's different with civilized man," commented Mr. Chuggins. "He crawls under his car and gets his face smeared with automobile grease."

Never permit a costive tendency to develop into a habit; if the habit exists have recourse at once to Garfield Tea.—Adv.

Despise not a small wound, a poor kinsman or a humble enemy.—Danish proverb.

Any woman can fool a man, but it's sometimes difficult to keep him fooled.

BELL-ANS FOR INDIGESTION

Ruth Arnold's impulsive friend precipitated herself into a chair and said gayly: "Ruth, you dark-eyed witch, you have the male hearts at this inn in captivity; but I know the one among them you are going to marry!"

"Wonder of wonders, Lucy, I don't and besides—" Ruth began.

"And besides," Lucy proceeded, "you don't like to talk about such things—I'll say that for you. But, listen. I happened to be in a canoe last evening near the Point, and I overheard some of the men talking; and I distinctly heard that handsome Baltimore fellow, Lee Hargrave, make a wager that he would be engaged to you before you left!"

Ruth's astonishment and disgust were evident on her face. "What a thing to say! Lucy, if you love me, don't spread this any farther—"

"There he goes now!" Lucy exclaimed, and Ruth looking up saw Hargrave, handsome and serene in white flannels walking across the lawn.

She recognized him immediately, for he had caught her attention the day she and her mother arrived at their favorite summer place. She had made up her mind that there was no more conceited man on earth.

"I Can't Say What I Would Like to Say."

"He's coming here!" Lucy whispered. "I'll get out!"

Come he did, in his serene, assured fashion. Ruth watched him with hidden interest. So here was the man she was to marry—on his way to begin the winning of his wager.

He seated himself at her invitation and promptly sought to engage her for a yachting trip that some of the young people had under consideration. She started to refuse, then a sly purpose crept into her mind. Why not give him a good lesson?

She accepted as graciously as she could in view of what she knew.

Offensive as the affair was, it held some amusement for her and besides she might teach him a wholesome lesson. She refused other invitations but never his. He began to wear a slight air of possession which pleased her. He began to grow a bit serious and she let him.

She was puzzled. He never talked about himself even when she tried to lead him on. Only when a gray-haired man pointed him out to another as a mining engineer who was remarkably successful did she gain any information about him. He was always one of the first to take hold of work incidental to any of the good times, and he was certainly thoughtful of others.

"Really," she had advised herself after one pleasant time, "he is quite likeable." She stopped short. "What if I should fall in love with him—after that wager? Gracious!"

The next day a telegram called him away, and it was a lonely day for her. Lucy, coming with a merry query, was very coldly treated. But the day gave Ruth time for thought. She came to a decision.

"I shall—let's see, what's a cruel way to say it—tie a can to him when he comes back!" she said brutally.

He returned looking a bit weary and haggard, but with his calm self-esteem as fresh as ever. He sought her soon after his arrival that evening and, shooing away others that tried to join them, took her away on a walk along the shore.

"It's coming," Ruth warned herself and tried to smile. She was a bit frightened, for he had found, sensibly she acknowledged it, a place in her heart—a small, wee corner, anyway.

Where the sea swept away from the high bluff, he halted. "Ruth, my work carries me into rough country, and I am going to take back to that work some of the best memories of my life. I wish, too, [illegible] take—take me other memory with you."

She tried to [illegible] herself, "how easy! My pr[illegible] kiss, and then—never to meet again!" but something in his voice cheapened the words. Her heart jumped as she wondered if he had made the wager in fun, and then really fallen in love with her.

He went on. "I can't say what I would like to say in the way I want to. But I am desperately in love with you."

His calm assurance aroused her. "There is a good reason why you say that." Then she told him what she knew about the wager.

He listened in silence, his face turned to the moonswept sea. When her hot words ended with, "These shores have heard just such tales many times. A real man's love means too much to me," he was silent for a little; and then he spoke so evenly his voice did not betray his mood:

"I have only three weeks off in the year. I cannot meet you elsewhere. I am sorry I impress you as being egotistical; it is my way, that's all. At heart, I am sure I am not; for from boyhood I have fought for confidence in myself. Suppose we return."

He talked in a quiet way on the return; and he left her with a farewell word that he had to return that night. Under the soft light of the corridor globe his face was white and drawn.

She went to her room and stood thinking, with a queer sensation of hurt and pain within her. He had evidently come all those miles just to ask her. But he had not denied the wager.

The sky broke and fell about her the next morning. Lucy came gayly up. "My dear, I made a mistake. Now that he's gone and no harm's done I want to tell you the chap making that wager was Evert. One of the men told me. Their voices are so much alike—"

With a cry Ruth rushed away to the shelter of her room. What to do—what to do! She must reach him. Dizzily she sought out her brother who had joined them that week. He listened, his cold gray eyes heating. Then he said in a frank, brotherly way: "You darned little fool. He's one of the finest chaps here. You write what you want and I'll get it to him or bust. And if you ever pull off such a deal again, I'll spank you myself."

In the evening Ruth saw a dusty roadster that bore evidence of hard driving glide to a stop with squealing brakes in front of the inn. A tall figure rose from it, mounted the steps and came toward them. She heard her brother say, "Get inside, sis." But she was powerless to move. Anyway she was willing that the whole world see and know—and some of it did in the next moment.

OBJECTED TO SHRILL NOTES

Cat Evidently Had Its Own Idea of Music, and the Courage of Its Convictions.

A friend tells me, writes "Cat Lover," that he was visiting at a house where there was a beautiful big Persian cat. One day he entered a room and found the whole household, to his astonishment, lustily whistling a well-known air. "Whence this thusness?" he asked, and received as answer sotto voce—"Look at the cat." Glancing at this quadruped he beheld it pacing furiously to and fro with back erect and quivering tail. Its whole being suggested fury, a sort of Berserker rage. The most vociferous whistler of the party was a young lady of the house who seemed to take a special delight in making her notes loud, clear, and shrill. The cat directed all its venom against her. Eventually, it lay crouching before her in the act of springing, and would certainly have attacked her viciously had not someone intervened by thrusting a folded newspaper between the cat and the momentary object of its hate. It appeared that "The Old Hundred" produced a similar effect on the animal, but other airs failed to manifest any power to arouse hostility. Sprightly airs with soft, low notes seemed to give unfeigned pleasure. But high, shrill, long-drawn-out notes—especially when they were produced by whistling—appeared to cause it acute physical pain, which it showed in the aforementioned manner.

How Bolshevism Began.

The mystery of where the soviet system was evolved has been cleared up to the satisfaction of British Socialists by the disclosure of Russian trade delegates to London that it took its origin from a meeting held in London in 1915.

Lenine, Krassin, Bogdanoff and other "intellectuals" happened to be in London together at that time, each for his own special reason. They got together and discussed the form of government best suited to Russia after the inevitable downfall of czarism, and formulated the Bolshevik scheme based on Marxism which now prevails.

Before separating, the reformers bound themselves to work for the realization of the plan, fuller details of which were afterward worked out by correspondence and at subsequent secret conferences in other European centers.

The Sun Oven.

In some tropical regions, where coal is scarce—as in Egypt, the Punjab and the African Karoo—teakwood boxes blackened inside, fitted with glass tops and properly insulated are in common use for cooking, baking and other purposes. These sun ovens, which have the advantage of eliminating cost of fuel, afford a temperature of 240 to 275 degrees Fahrenheit in the middle of the day. Provided with a mirror for a reflector, they will run up to 290 degrees.

WHO'S WHO?

By RUTH W. BAKER.

(© 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The lobby of the Hotel Rexford is a most inconvenient place for one's bride of an hour to dissolve into tears. At least, so thought Ned Burton. They had so far succeeded in appearing nonchalant and many years married, but Esther had been seized with stage fright as the awful person of the hotel clerk met her shrinking gaze.

"Oh, Ned!" she gasped. "Just a minute! Just a minute! They're all looking at us! Oh, I wish we hadn't—No, I don't. Oh dear, what will happen to us if your father disowns you?"

"Oh, I say, Esther, there's a good girl! Don't cry—not here, anyway. Father's a good old scout. He'll take me back into the office all right.

Their lingering footsteps had at last brought them before the desk, and now the polite clerk was observing them with a sort of detached inquiry. Esther tremulously nudged her husband.

"Oh—ah—O, yes, the register," exclaimed Ned. Now—Great Scott!"—the pen fell from his nerveless fingers. "My father!"

"Where?" quavered Esther, looking nervously over her shoulder.

"Here, on the register. His name, I mean. Look here, Esther, it's a great chance for us, if he ever sees you, well, it's all over but the cheering."

As the door of the elevator closed upon the eloping couple, an elderly gentleman strolled up to the desk. "Have you by any chance—" then his eyes fell upon the open register. "By George, they're here!" His eyes twinkled. "Didn't know the young cub had so much grit. I ran away with the girl I loved. He's pretty much like the old man, after all. Oh, by the way," to the clerk, "did you happen to notice Mrs. Burton?"

"Oh, yes, sir," the obliging clerk hastened to explain. "Not very tall, sir, brown eyes, had a white feather in her hat and—"

"Yes, sir," interrupted Mr. Burton. "Much obliged."

Smiling to himself, he turned from the desk, then stopped abruptly. What luck! There she was right before him!

With a smile and a bow, he approached the girl, who stood watching the elevator door with anxious eyes. "I recognized you, instantly, my dear, and I—"

"'My dear,' indeed!" interrupted the very indignant young lady. "Why, you old flirt, if you don't—"

"But, my dear young lady, I am your new father," said the embarrassed Mr. Burton. "I was looking for—"

"Well, you may find some one who is willing to be your daughter, but I should advise you not to insult ladies in a respectable hotel," and the outraged girl swept past him into the elevator, leaving the innocent man speechless with indignation and rage.

Meanwhile Esther, who had been left in the writing room, had become tired of waiting for Ned to return with his father and a parental blessing. "I'll just stroll through the lobby," she thought. "It may give me something besides myself to think about. Oh dear, if I could only see Ned's father and talk to him, I am sure he would forgive us. Good gracious, there he is now!"

"Bald-headed, fidgety," whispered Esther, "I know that's Ned's father. I am going to speak to him. Yes, I am," defiantly, although no one seemed inclined to oppose her. "I beg your pardon," she began tremulously, "but is this Mr. Burton?"

"Yes, madame, my name is Merton," replied the old gentleman testily, peering at her over the top of his gold-rimmed spectacles.

"Oh, sir, please forgive us. Truly, it was more my fault than Ned's."

"What—what—" blurted Mr. Merton.

"Oh, I am your daughter, you know. That is, your son—" Esther stopped, for the gentleman was looking at her askance. "Pretty good for a bachelor," he muttered to himself. "She must be crazy. I'd better not excite her." Slapping his knee jovially he exclaimed: "Why, of course! How stupid of me! My daughter, yes, yes."

"Oh, good! Now let me find Ned. There he is now!"

In alarm Mr. Merton caught her arm. He must speak soothingly to her. "There, there. You must wait until he gets here," he wheedled.

"But he is here. Don't you see? Oh, Ned, Ned!" Esther was still trying to pull away, when Ned, talking angrily to Mr. Burton, drew near.

"I tell you, father, she is not a tyrant. What on earth are you talking about? She is as timid as a mouse." He was interrupted by Esther's cry. "There she is now. Good heavens, what is that fellow doing with her? Here, you ruffian—"

"Lucky you came along as you did. Keep a sharp eye on her," advised Mr. Merton confidentially. "She's too pretty a little lunatic to—"

"Lunatic!" cried Ned and Esther in unison.

"This isn't the girl I spoke to," roared Mr. Burton. "Who the dickens!"

"I guess you'll have to excuse me," stammered Mr. Merton, backing ponderously into a passerby and finally making a blind rush for the elevator. Peeping through the gratings of the slowly rising car, he saw the young man kiss the fair lunatic, saw the old man kiss them both, and then: "Confound these elevators for going so fast," he muttered, as he vigorously blew his nose.

AN OPEN LETTER TO WOMEN

Mrs. Little Tells How She Suffered and How Finally Cured

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was not able to do my housework and had to lie down most of the time and felt bad in my left side. My monthly periods were irregular, sometimes five or seven months apart and when they did appear would last for two weeks and were very painful. I was sick for about a year and a half and doctored but without any improvement.

A neighbor recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me, and the second day after I started taking it I began to feel better and I kept on taking it for seven months. Now I keep house and perform all my household duties. You can use these facts as you please and I will recommend Vegetable Compound to everyone who suffers as I did." — Mrs. J. S. LITTLE, 3455 Livingston St., Philadelphia, Pa.

How much harder the daily tasks of a woman become when she suffers from such distressing symptoms and weakness as did Mrs. Little. No woman should allow herself to get into such a condition because such troubles may be speedily overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which for more than forty years has been restoring American women to health.

OPPOSITION TO HAUGHTON'S PLAN

The suggestion recently advanced by Percy D. Haughton, former Harvard football coach, that a forward pass blocked behind the line of scrimmage be subject to recovery by the defending team, has not been met with favor by many coaches.

William H. (Big Bill) Edwards, former Princeton captain, said: "If they keep on changing the rules, they will kill the game."

"Chick" Mehan, Syracuse coach, declared that the suggestion, if adopted, would tend to make the game less open because passes would be more dangerous and the light college elevens would be handicapped.

"Buck" O'Neil, Columbia coach, said such a grounded pass would cause a lively scramble in which players would be more liable to injury.

Bob Folwell, head coach of the navy, said he had not given the idea much thought, but he believed it was worth while considering.

"Instead of having an incompleted forward pass revert to the team which started the play, make a forward pass blocked behind the throwers' line of scrimmage subject to recovery by opponents under the same conditions as a blocked kick," is Haughton's idea for improving the game.

"If you allow the blocked forward pass to be recovered behind the line of scrimmage, as is a blocked kick, you force the offense to protect the thrower just as it must protect the kicker," said Haughton. "Instead of having five men eligible to receive a pass, and in a dangerous position, you will have only three, possibly two.

"Why restrict the forward pass? It is not football, and gradually the game will stray further away from the fundamental aspects and become a combination of basketball and baseball."

PLANE DROPS BALL

A novel kickoff was witnessed at an international football match which took place in Vienna recently between Austria and Hungary.

Both teams were lined up, ready for the start, but it was noticed they had no ball. An airplane, however, suddenly appeared on the horizon, hovered over the playing field for a short time, and then, to the huge delight of some 50,000 onlookers, slowly glided down until it was 50 feet above the center. Then the pilot dropped a football, and as soon as the ball touched the ground the referee's whistle sounded and the match was on.

Having got rid of its bomb, the airplane mounted again and made off amid the cheers and laughter of the crowd.

FREAKIEST PLAY OF SEASON

Umpire Allows Runner to Score Who Left Base Before Fly Ball Had Been Caught.

Del Howard, manager of Oakland, Cal., team, tells of the freakiest play that has happened in the Coast league this season.

The Oaks were playing Seattle on the latter's field. Casey was umpiring the bases and Jimmy Toman handled the balls and strikes.

Jack Knight of the Oaks was on first base when Pop Arlett hit a fly to left center. Bill Stumpf made a great catch of it. Knight, who thought Stumpf couldn't get near the ball, had passed third base.

Stumpf threw to Kenworthy and the ball went through his hands, passing by several other Seattle players. It hit the bats in front of the Oakland bench and was picked up and thrown to second before Knight could return.

Umpire Casey ruled him out. Then Del Howard claimed the runner should score, as the ground rules allowed the man to advance if the ball hit the players' dugout or bats.

Casey reversed his decision and the run counted. Then ensued a 10-minute argument.

HUGGINS ANGLING FOR FASTER OUTFIELDERS

Babe Ruth Will Not Be Member of Pitching Staff.

Yankee Manager Realizes That Speed Must Be Added to Team If It Is to Be Successful—Pratt Is Uncertain Quantity.

If Miller Huggins has his way the Yankees of 1921 will be a more fleet-footed aggregation than they were last season and in previous campaigns. The little manager realizes that speed must be added to the team if it is to be successful next year, and it looks as though a few of the slow-moving members of the team will be among the missing next spring. In their place Huggins hopes to have men who are fleet of foot.

In discussing the future of the Yankees Manager Huggins said:

"I am going to make efforts to obtain two new outfielders who have in their makeup ability to cover a lot of territory in the outer works and who will also show speed on the base paths. I am also going to try to improve the pitching staff. I am looking for one more pitcher, not necessarily a left-hander. No, Ruth will not be a member of the pitching staff next season. It is my present intention to retain him in the outfield. If between now and next spring a shift involving the big fellow is made he may land on first base."

The leader of the Yankees was asked about the retirement of Del Pratt.

"I have not heard of Pratt since the close of last season," said Huggins. "I do not know whether or not he will play major league ball next season, but in the event that his services are lost to the club I think his place around second base will be filled in a satisfactory manner."

GRASS AIDS SPOKE

Many ballplayers chew tobacco while on the field, because they are subject to nervous and mental strain, but Tris Speaker, the great leader of the Cleveland Indians, does not.

Spoke uses a substitute for tobacco that gets the same results or perhaps better. Grass is what he made cuds of while thinking out the knotty problems that won Cleveland's first pennant and a world's title.

Hughie Jennings used to pick grass in the coacher's box while chortling his famous "Eyah! Ty 'em, Ty" yell. But Tris has got Hughie beaten a city block in picking the blades. He has the grass eating championship bound, gagged and tied to the mast.

The Cleveland manager explains his grass eating stunt in this wise:

"I have to have some way of giving vent to my physical nervousness. I am so intensely interested in every play that I forget everything else, and this grass eating has become a habit with me. I really believe it would be hard for me to have to play on a field that didn't sport any lawn."

A New Version.

Seven-year-old Joseph had been going to Sunday school for almost three months and during that time had heard several Bible stories. His mother was boasting of his ability to relate them, while his grandfather waited rather impatiently. He was ready to start on a trip downtown and Joseph was going with him.

Then all at once Joseph, too, grew impatient. He was in grandfather's car and could not discover the reason for grandfather's lingering. So out he shouted. "Hurry up, grandpa, or we'll be too late to go. You're as slow as Moses was when he built the ark."

Like and Unlike.

The death of Anders Zorn, the famous etcher, brought the talk round to Whistler, and a Pittsburgh poet said:

"Whistler and Walter Sickert were once printing etchings together. Sickert, stumbling, had the misfortune to drop a copper plate.

"'How like you!' said Whistler, icily.

"Hardly five minutes later Whistler, usually the deftest, surest of men, dropped a copper plate himself. He stooped and picked it up. Then he murmured:

"'How unlike me!'"

A man sitting on the top of a Fifth avenue bus was deeply engrossed in his newspaper. The seat beside him was vacant. Soon a large, lapless woman got aboard and seated herself in the empty place. In her arms she held a baby. What it lacked in beauty it made up in friendliness, and presently it found itself gaping interestedly at the nice-looking man by its side.

The distracted gentleman stood it as long as he could, then, with a very pained expression, he turned to the woman and said:

New Church Constitution of the Union Church

An event of considerable historical importance occurred at the annual meeting of the Union Congregational church of Weymouth and Braintree on Thursday evening, Jan. 6, when that body adopted a new constitution and by-laws and voted to incorporate. Under these provisions the "Union Religious Society", which has existed as an independent body body for 110 years, having been incorporated by an act of the Legislature on Feb. 21, 1811, and the Union church become one body. The members of the two former organizations become charter members of the new church organization, the former as "Sustaining members" and the latter as "Church members."

Another radical change in the new constitution is that the work and service of the Union church for the community is delegated to six departments: 1, Worship; 2, Education; 3, Benevolence; 4, Music; 5, Social Service, and 6, Business. The officers, together with the heads of the departments constitute the church cabinet or administrative board.

Provisions of the constitution reveal the true community nature of the church. "The government of this church is vested in its members, who exercise the right of control in all its affairs. It is amenable to no other ecclesiastical body, but it accepts the obligations of mutual counsel, comity and co-operation involved in the free fellowship of the Congregational churches.....We believe in the freedom and responsibility of the individual soul, and the right of private judgment.....While it is expected that every member will unite in the spirit of the Statement of Faith of the Church, the liberty of individual interpretation of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith shall not be restricted." In other words Union church declares itself an inclusive, not an exclusive, church.

In his annual report the pastor, Rev. Caleb Justice, told of his appreciation of the wonderful spirit of co-operation which had been manifested in every department of the church work during the past year. "This had been especially evident" he said, "in trying out new lines of service and new methods of work. The use of motion pictures for the illustration of the evening sermons in presenting graphically by pictures various aspects of truth and morality, and in which we have been pioneers, has been crowned with success. The pictures are not primarily to entertain, but to drive home some gospel message, and have thus been used as one of the agencies, with the music, the Scripture and the address with this aim in view. The fact that many other church people have come here to investigate our Sunday evening services, and then adopted our plan, is merely an indication of the acceptability of this modern method of teaching by parables."

The pastor read from some letters that he had received in appreciation of the friendliness of Union church, during that year past. "Among the many churches that I have known or visited, Union church seems to me eminent in warm-hearted, sunny friendliness of spirit, a most winning quality, not so frequently met with by the stranger within the gate", wrote one.

He thanked the church and friends for their splendid Christmas gift, saying that as he counted over the crisp $5 bills up to $175 his heart was melted by the love and kindness that prompted it all. "My greatest wish for the year to come in all the undertakings that we shall together carry thru", he continued, "is that our Union church be noted for its kindness, and for the love back of the Gospel message. It is expressed in these lines:

"Drop a word of cheer and kindness—
like a flash and it is gone,
But there's half a hundred ripples circling on and on and on;
Bearing hope and joy and comfort, on each splashing, dashing wave;
Till you wouldn't believe the volume of the one kind word you gave.
Drop a word of cheer and kindness—
in a minute you forget,
But there's gladness still aswelling,
and there's joy acircling yet,
And you've rolled a wave of comfort whose sweet music can be heard Over miles and miles of water, just by dropping one kind word."

Selectman Hawes Not a Candidate This Year

Because of the practice of printing the annual town warrant in the Town Book, instead of the local newspapers, it is necessary to fix the closing date about one month earlier than is really necessary. The closing date this year is tomorrow, Jan. 15, before the voters have started to talk town meeting affairs.

Some have thought it possible to put through the Legislature, so that it will be available in March, the new "Limited Town Meeting" Act providing for town meeting members, but usually the Legislature moves slowly. The committees have many petitions to consider, and on each one or more hearings must be given. Then some time is necessary to draw up reports and secure passage in both branches of the Legislature, and finally the approval of the Governor. Usually acts of this kind are referred to voters at the annual town election or at the annual State election.

It has been customary in Weymouth to hold Republican caucuses in each ward and later a general caucus, but any man or woman can become a candidate for any office on nomination papers if they are filed early enough. Already the time is limited.

Just how many of the present board of Selectmen will be candidates for renomination is unknown, but Bradford Hawes, the chairman, has declined a renomination as will be seen by the following letter:

Editor Gazette and Transcript:

In March, 1894, I was elected as a member of the Board of Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor of Weymouth and have been re-elected to the same offices year by year until the present time.

I appreciate highly the confidence which my fellow townsmen have thus placed in me, and it has always been my endeavor to prove worthy of that confidence.

I am now fully convinced that the time has arrived when I should resign the honors and duties of the office to another.

Having arrived at this conclusion, I feel that it is due to my fellow citizens, and especially to any who may aspire to the office, that I should give this timely notice, that under no conditions shall I be a candidate for another re-election.

I wish to express my thanks to the many friends who have supported me during this long term of office and my cordial good will to all with whom I have been associated upon the board. I believe that, whether they have always agreed with me or not, they have all been men who had the interests of the town at heart. I recall a remark made by one former member, who said, "I would rather be a Selectman of Weymouth, than bePresident of the United States."

I believe that all those with whom I have served upon the board have been actuated by like principles of loyalty to the town.

Yours truly,
BRADFORD HAWES

PURIFIER AT OIL WORKS

Residents of North Weymouth have been making a lot of remonstrating over the odor which comes from the plant of the Massachusetts Oil company just across the river in East Braintree. At certain times, especially when the wind is right, the odor is stifling. Complaints to boards of health followed and were then the odor was declared a menace to the health of the people.

Petitions to the state board of health setting forth that the plant was a nuisance, were in circulation and were largely signed. These petitions have not been presented as yet, as it is understood that the Oil company is installing a purifier which it is claimed will kill the odor complained of. This cleanser is about ready to be put into operation and for that reason the petition is being withheld to give the company an opportunity to put it into operation.

Some time ago a similar condition existed at the plant of the American Fertilizer company at North Weymouth and not only were the residents of North Weymouth much inconvenienced, but residents of Quincy as well. Then the company installed a purifier and the nuisance was abated.

COAL AT FAIR PRICES

The Weymouth and Braintree coal dealers were not in the list of Massachusetts dealers, issued by Fuel Administrator Eugene C. Hultman, who he alleges are charging more for domestic coal than is proper.

Tornado Relief Report This Evening

The Selectmen have called a meeting at South Weymouth this evening, to hear the report of the Tornado Relief Committee, of which William J. Holbrook is chairman. It will be held in the Engine House hall at 7.45, and the public is invited.

Not until today has a report been received from the Field Day Committee, which conducted the very successful field day at the Weymouth Fairgrounds, there having been some delay in getting the complete returns.

The committee, of which F. E. Waite was chairman, report receipts of $3,713.14 and expenditures of $214.44 leaving the net proceeds $3,498.70, which were given to the Tornado Relief Committee. The items of the Field Day committee report are:

SERIOUSLY INJURED

While boarding a train at Quincy station early on Monday on his way to work at East Braintree, Charles H. Brown, 63, a shoeworker, living at No. 2 Sea street, North Weymouth, received a fractured hip and possible internal injuries when he was knocked down and trampled upon by workers employed at Fore River.

The Quincy Patriot says the aged man had boarded the special train which arrives at Quincy station at 6.30 from South Station. The Fore River employes were leaving the cars when the accident occurred. Brown had entered the smoker and was about to take a seat when he was caught in the rush of workers hurrying to get off the train. He was pushed over and trampled upon, sustaining painful injuries. Unable to get up, he was assisted into a seat. Station Master A. A. Patenaude sent in a call to police headquarters for an ambulance and the injured man was taken from the train by Sergeant Master Carroll and other employes.

At Quincy hospital it was found that Brown had sustained a fracture of the right thigh and possible internal injuries.

Brown is married and resides with his wife at the Sea street address. When Mrs. Brown was notified of the accident by the Weymouth police she started for the Quincy hospital with her brother, William T. Seabury.

The police began an immediate investigation and are seeking to establish the identity of the men responsible for the accident.

President Wilson Sends General Crowder to Cuba to Help It Out of Trouble.

INTERVENTION NOT UNLIKELY

Congress Revives War Finance Corporation, Despite Veto—Senate Committee Debating Disarmament Plans—Gompers Assails Supreme Court for Labor Decision.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

Cuba must clean house. If she is unwilling or unable to stabilize her financial and political conditions, Uncle Sam may find it necessary to do it for her. That is the warning the island republic received last week from the administration in Washing-

rious condition of affairs in s been a matter of common ge for some time, but our government's intention was made known only when it was announced that President Wilson had sent Judge Advocate General Enoch H. Crowder to Havana to confer with President Menocal. General Crowder went on the battleship Minnesota and with him was a staff of army officers. In announcing his mission, President Wilson said:

"The moratorium and financial crisis in Cuba continues, the solution of which appears more difficult on account of the unsettled presidential election. A continuation of the present situation would prove most detrimental to the prosperity of Cuba and harmful to the relations between the United States and Cuba.

"As this cannot be but a matter of the closest concern to this government, because of the special relations existing between the two countries, the President has instructed General Crowder to confer with President Menocal as to the best means of remedying the situation."

Actual intervention, which would be under the Platt amendment, will be avoided by the administration if possible. If it is necessary, it is not certain that military forces would be required.

Cuba's troubles are both financial and political. Last summer, when sugar brought such high prices in the United States, the island went sugar mad and enormous fortunes were made. Then came the sudden collapse of prices, and the cane mills closed and Cuba, generally speaking, went broke. The industrial situation grew worse daily, and financial concerns were in great distress. Many banks went into insolvency and a moratorium was established, which has recently been extended another month. All this is complicated by the political mixup in the island. President Menocal's term expires on May 20, but no one knows who is to succeed him. After the recent elections numerous charges of fraud were made and the winner has not yet been determined.

American bankers, who are vitally interested in Cuba, disapprove of the moratorium. Some time ago Albert Rathbone was sent to the island as financial adviser and he submitted to the Cuban government a number of recommendations which were approved by our State department; but apparently Menocal and his cabinet have taken no action toward adopting them. The Cuban minister in Washington was surprised by the sending of General Crowder and immediately asked an explanation, but he did not receive much satisfaction.

Congress is determined to "relieve" American business and agriculture in its own way, despite the opposition of President Wilson. As had been expected, the President vetoed the bill to revive the War Finance corporation, and first the senate and then the house re-passed the measure over the veto, by overwhelming majorities in both cases. Mr. Wilson said the corporation was a war-credit agency, not desirable or needed in peace times; and that its revival "would exert no beneficial influence on the situation, but would raise false hopes among the very people who would expect most, and would be hurtful to the natural and orderly processes of business and finance." The message showed that our exports of domestic products have increased greatly since the armistice, and that it is mainly Europe's inability to make payment that prevents still larger exports. Mr. Wilson's views were admittedly those of Secretary of the Treasury Houston, and a good many economists agree with them; but, quite regardless of party lines, most of the members of congress evidently think otherwise.

Before the revived corporation can make many loans for financing exports, it will be necessary for the President to fill at least one of the two vacancies on the board of directors, as Secretary Houston, ex-officio chairman, is too busy to give much time to the investigation of the adequacy of securities. In any case, according to officials of the corporation, it will be about two months before the first loans can be authorized.

The senate foreign relations committee is trying to determine the best method of starting disarmament of the great powers, having before it two leading plans. That of Senator Borah, as is well known, is to invite Great Britain and Japan to negotiate with the United States an agreement to reduce their naval building programs 50 per cent a year for a term of years. The proposition has aroused much interest in the other countries named and is approved by many leading men. In the senate committee it has been suggested that France, Italy and perhaps some other nations, should be included, but Mr. Borah objects that this would complicate the plan and probably bring in the subject of reduction of armies.

The other plan before the committee is proposed by Senator Walsh of Montana and supported by senators who favor the League of Nations. It is in the form of a resolution requesting the President to appoint delegates to represent the United States in the disarmament discussions to be conducted under the auspices of the league. The "irreconcilables" fear that this would involve the United States in recognition of the league.

President-elect Harding's inauguration will not be conducted with the "Jeffersonian simplicity" demanded by some of our eminent statesmen. The Knox resolution providing a fund of $50,000 for the expenses of the ceremony was adopted by the senate, only Borah, Fletcher, Gronna, Kenyon, Norris, McKellar, Phelan and La Follette voting against it. It may be that the patriotic citizens who go to the national capital for the doings of March 4 will not be fleeced so thoroughly as usual. Senator McCumber of North Dakota says he will introduce a bill to prevent the charging of extortionate prices by Washington hotel and restaurant men during inauguration week. Nothing has yet been decided about an inaugural ball, but probably one will be held, and probably the use of the great pension building will be granted for the occasion by congress.

Senator Harding resumed his conferences with leading Americans after the holidays, but has not authorized any statements concerning the results of these conversations. Neither has he told any of his cabinet choices. Indeed, he was quoted the other day as saying he had not yet offered a cabinet place to anyone. Just now the chief interest concerns the possible selection of Henry C. Wallace of Des Moines for secretary of agriculture. He is opposed by the Chicago packers and allied interests in Chicago and New York, and by certain other groups who recall that Mr. Harding said during the campaign that he favored giving the position to a "real dirt farmer."

Organized labor is much exercised over the possibility that a union man may not be made secretary of labor. Its choice at present is either James O'Connell of the metal workers or W. G. Lee of the railroad trainmen. There is a chance that Mr. Harding may select Hoover for this place, and Charles M. Schwab also has been mentioned. Hoover, it is said, might be acceptable to Samuel Gompers, but the naming of the steel man probably would arouse the wrath of the laborites.

Speaking of Gompers, it may be well to call attention to the labor chief's intemperate attack on the Supreme court of the United States. That august tribunal last week handed down a decision to the effect that labor unions or their members are accountable to the anti-trust laws where they depart from their normal and legitimate objects and engage in an actual combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade; in brief, this is a decision against the legitimacy of the "secondary boycott." Mr. Gompers promptly issued a statement in which he characterized the decision as a "blow at the movement for human freedom and progress" and asserted that the court had "joined forces with the anti-union shop movement."

The British government is showing much greater interest in the establishing of trade relations with [illegible] and in the renewed menace of spreading Bolshevism than in France's alarm over the failure of Germany to disband and disarm the civil militia of Bavaria and East Prussia. Italy, too, is not inclined to become excited over the latter matter, and consequently France has not yet acted on her threat to occupy more German territory. The Bavarians do not believe the rest of the world would permit further seizure of German territory, and they think France will hesitate to occupy the Ruhr district because such a move would tend to unite the factions in Germany and arouse a patriotic spirit, resulting, perhaps, in bloodshed. The German government is not ready to resume the discussion of reparations and has asked that the reopening of the conference be delayed. Both these matters will be discussed by the allied premiers in Paris on January 19, and they will also take up the question of the future attitude of the allies toward Greece. The Greek government is now showing a very conciliatory spirit and is ready to give the allies full guaranties that Greece will carry out the provisions of the treaty of Sevres.

Eamonn de Valera, having reached Dublin safely by way of Manchester, was preparing a manifesto in which, according to an authoritative source, he would deny that the Sinn Fein is making peace overtures to England. He is quoted as saying he would listen to proposals of the English government if they were based on recognition of the Irish republic. The British government, on the other hand, lets it be known that it would be willing to confer with De Valera, but only as a private citizen, all questions of separation being excluded from the discussion. So that situation appears unchanged and only a wonderful optimist could see in it any hope of early settlement.

Lord Mayor Daniel O'Callaghan of Cork arrived in Newport News, Va., on Tuesday as a stowaway on an American steamer, and at once arose the question of his admission to the country. A special board of inquiry ruled that he should be excluded, like any other stowaway, and he was then released on parole. The friends of "Free Ireland" rallied to his defense, and the self-constituted committee on the Irish situation invited him to appear before it and make "some startling revelations" he was said to have about his person.

There was rejoicing throughout the country when word arrived from Moose Factory, a Hudson's Bay company post at the lower end of Hudson's bay, that the crew of the navy balloon A-5598, missing since December 13, had reached that place in safety. The three men, their balloon driven to the Far North by a furious storm, landed in the Canadian forest and made their way to the post, and are now on the road back to civilization, probably none the worse for the exciting experience.

Landslide Threatens Pittsburgh Rail Terminal

View showing some of the big steam shovels which are working night and day in an attempt to repair damage caused by a huge landslide which buried a railroad yard building and two main and six side tracks leading into the Pennsylvania terminal in Pittsburgh. The slide moves at the rate of about a foot an hour, and has compelled the railroad company to re-route many trains and curtail some service. Mayor Babcock of Pittsburgh, acting under instructions from the city council, has sent for General Goethals, builder of the Panama canal.

Why Buffaloes Wallow.

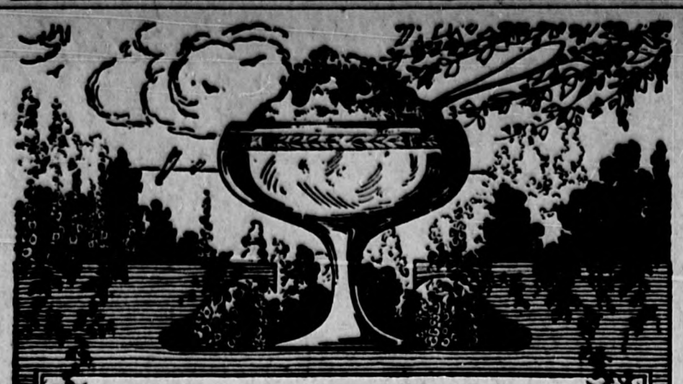

The water buffalo of China has few sweat glands in its skin, and for this reason cannot endure hard work in the sun for a long period unless its body is wet with water. This accounts for the desire of the buffalo to wallow in mud or water. The animals are easily overcome by heat if worked hard in the sun, and sometimes they go crazy and become very dangerous.

To Raise House Plants From Slips

To grow a house plant from a slip, take a half-ripe branch and cut a slip three inches long. After taking off all leaves except the upper two, plant it in wet sand, exposing only half of the slip. The sand should be kept moist. When the roots begin to grow, transplant the slip into a pot with ordinary soil. Plants such as oleander and ivy will root in water.

Casus Belli.

In an Irish case of a domestic riot involving much injury to person and property, a witness in the course of a vivid narrative swore as follows: "He says to me, 'Is that your father?' And I says to him, 'It is me father.' And he says, 'It is well you told me, for I thought he was an ould gorilly,' and then the fight began, me lord."—From the Argonaut.

Panama Canal Zone.

The United States did not acquire, by the Isthmian canal convention of November 18, 1903, any title to territory in the Republic of Panama, but merely a perpetual right of occupation, use, and control over a zone of land ten miles in width, and covering an area of 436 square miles. Tragedy in Insect Life.

There are many eggs of small insects that are hatching all the time. The ray of sunshine, falling weakly upon the side of a tree or upon an old log, will hatch out many of these eggs, and the little creatures wobble through the frozen air for a few minutes before perishing. Possibly it is a tragedy with them when they are brought into the world too soon. At any rate they do not flourish; they do not mate and propagate their kind when hatched out in winter.

HOME TOWN HELPS

DISTINCTIVE SIGN FOR TOWN

Idea That Is Attaining Popularity in England Is Worth Consideration in Our Own Land.

They are endeavoring in England to make a fashion in village signs—what a good notion to borrow! It has been urged that for the unlovely notice at the entrance to a town, reading, "Fairfield. No 'cut-outs,'" there be substituted a sign such as villages and the visitors to them enjoyed in the old days; a design, boldly executed and colored, which should call to mind some historical or industrial association with the place, or some suggestion inherent in the name itself and which would come in time to be known as the symbol of the town. The London Daily Mail thought the idea so good that it opened a competition to designers of village signs. The first prize was $5,000 and has gone to a man who made a sign for the village of St. Peter's-in-Thanet—the English have literally picturesque names on their map, but some of our own Indian words would offer the artist as rich an opportunity, and think, too, what he could do for Concord and Lexington, for Deerfield and Tarrytown. Several of the English villages have already responded with the offer to buy the designs submitted in this particular competition and have them executed and set up. In addition automobilists have declared their desire to contribute toward the expenses in some cases, for they say that though they live in the city, they would have much pleasure from these signs. At this point, however, the village will be wisest to refuse. The town may go where it will for the artist, but the sign must be its own, no gift to it from an outsider—better take five years to get it and have it real, than obtain it quickly and artificially. The village sign is no fashion to sweep the countryside wholesale, but what an admirable one to set going and let grow steadily!—The Villager.

MERE NUMBERS NO CRITERION

Town Must Be Judged by Conditions of Living That Prevail Within Its Borders.

The gathering of important information by the census bureau has been a gradual growth. The first census in 1790 was taken for the sole purpose of determining the representation, which by the Constitution had been put on a numerical basis. Each succeeding decennial enumeration has had this as its first object, but gradually other, and actually more important information has been included, until now the volumes issued by the census bureau on other subjects far outnumber those which contain the figures of population. It is a regrettable fact that we pay too little attention to these other figures. They contain a wealth of information and suggestion for the improvement of industrial, social, religious and domestic relations of the people.

Rivalry between American cities based upon those conditions would be on a higher plane than the present rivalry in mere numbers. That city which could boast of being the best in which to live, best for all classes of society, would have far more benefit in its boasting than the one which could speak only of its numbers. Urban life in the United States is becoming too congested, too large a proportion of the entire population despite of improved facilities for urban living and transit. Cities would far better concern themselves with the conditions of living of their people than with the number of people themselves, as compared with other cities. That would be placing the emphasis where it belongs.

Town's Real Opportunities.

Nearly all places go down in history because of the kind of people they give to the world or encourage to remain, because of their interest in education, religious training and in true Americanism. The real greatness of any city depends on the future it is building for its people, not on the wealth and prestige which the people are winning for it today.

No town need be pessimistic because its numbers are small. There are opportunities aplenty for it to win lasting fame if it helps those within it to be intelligent, honest and anxious to help the nation and the world to be better places in which to live.—Walter I. Robinson in Indianapolis Star.

Ceylon Land of Cinnamon.

Although cinnamon is produced in various parts of the tropics, the best quality is produced in Ceylon, according to an article in the World Salesman. Owing to its peculiar climatic conditions, Ceylon is particularly adapted to the growing of the cinnamon tree, which requires an annual rainfall of 85 to 100 inches and an average temperature of 85 degrees. The tree has a very long life and has often been known to obtain the height of 40 feet.

Reports read by the various officers show much good work done during the past year and letters of appreciation from the Red Cross worker and the chief surgeon of the West Roxbury hospital, also from the chief surgeon of the Norfolk hospital were read by the secretary.

Mrs. Billings, chairman of the Welfare committee, in her report for December, stated that members of her committee visited the West Roxbury hospital on Dec. 7 and 21 with candy, apples, cigarettes, cakes and doughnuts, and on the 23d with 133 boxes filled with cakes, fruit etc, to be given out Christmas morning. Milton ladies furnished "goodies" which were distributed through the wards. Several young ladies from the Fore River offices made a lot of delicious candy for the boys. The boys decorated the wards and Red Cross hut with greens, and Mrs. Billings feels that their Christmas was made as happy as possible. On Jan. 4 two visiting parties went to the West Roxbury hospital with more comforts for the boys.

Members of the Committee have also made seven visits too the Norfolk hospital carrying good things to the boys who are there, and have furnished entertainment. Since Aug. 5 we have made 133 visits, given 6 entertainments and taken 102 boys for rides.

Mrs. Billings reports the need of overcoats for men who have not received their compensation. Any available will be gratefully received.

Mrs. Delia Caulfield, on behalf of the chapter, presented Mrs. Avery with a lovely bouquet of pink carnations, and in a few well chosen words expressed their appreciation of the earnest work which Mrs. Avery has done in organizing and so successfully managing the affairs of the chapter.

BATES OPERA HOUSE

A thrilling picture of life on a sailing vessel bound on a voyage round the Horn will be shown at the Bates Opera House when: "The Mutiny of the Elsinore", the new Metro special production with an all-star cast, will be given Jan. 15.

The picture may best be described as one which will make your hair raise, for it develops all of the power inherent in the source itself, that of Jack London's stirring story of a conflict between strong men of the sea. More than this, however, the picture presents an arresting portrayal of life on a sailing ship, where the mutiny of the gangster crew, who have been recruited from the dives of Frisco, is put down by the iron hand of John Pike, the sailing vessel's first mate.

The story of "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" concerns the machinations of Andreas Mellaire, second mate of the vessel, in his villianous desire to possess Margaret West, the beautiful daughter of the ship's half-owner, daughter of the ship's half-owner, cites the thugs and gunmen who compose the crew to mutiny, which is finally put down by the iron hand of John Pike.

The Shadow of the Sheltering Pines

THIS is a new story of the Storm Country, that magic land of mystery and romance where readers first made the acquaintance of "Tess." Many will remember how they laughed with her and at her, and how they cried over her.

"Tess" brought fame and fortune to Mary Pickford.

Mrs. White has created a new heroine in this story and has placed her in the same surroundings—the mysterious, lawless squatters of Cayuga lake.

Characters, plot and variety of incident, make it a narrative of compelling charm.

Selected on account of its great qualities of interest and appeal to all readers, as a serial for these columns.

PEANUT BUTTER GIVES RICH FLAVOR TO NUMEROUS DISHES

Peanut Butter Can Be Made Easily at Home by Putting Freshly Roasted Peanuts Through a Meat Grinder.

Besides making an excellent sandwich filling, peanut butter can be used to give flavor to a number of dishes that are cheap, easy to make, and very wholesome. The "butter," which really is just finely ground peanuts to which salt has been added, can be made at home very easily by putting freshly roasted peanuts through a meat grinder after the red skins have been removed from them. The machine should be adjusted to grind as fine as possible. If salt is added to the nuts before they are ground it is generally mixed in more thoroughly. The following recipes, which are a little out of the ordinary, are recommended by home economics specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

As a Substitute for Meat.

Meat substitutes, especially for luncheon or supper, have been found by many housekeepers to be a successful way of keeping down the food bill and of giving more variety to the meals. Peanut butter souffle has a rich, nutty flavor and fluffy texture, and when made by this recipe supplies a little more protein and considerably more fuel than a pound of average beef. With eggs at 60 cents a dozen and peanut butter at 35 cents a pound the materials will cost about 85 cents and will serve about four persons.

Peanut Butter Souffle.

3-8 cupful peanut butter.	1 cupful peanut juice.
1 cupful tomato juice.	1 cupful soft, stale breadcrumbs.
¼ teaspoonful onion juice.	1 teaspoonful salt.
	3 eggs.

Mix together the first five ingredients, add the well-beaten yolks of the eggs and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Pour the mixture into a buttered baking dish and cook in a moderate oven for about 20 minutes. If desired, water and a little lemon juice may be used instead of the tomato. Serve the souffle with tomato sauce made as follows:

2 teaspoonfuls butter or other fat.	½ teaspoonful salt.
2 tablespoonfuls flour.	1 cupful tomato juice.

Melt the butter, add the flour and cook for about a minute. Add the tomato juice and salt and stir the sauce until it thickens. Either skim milk or water flavored with tomato catsup may be used instead of the tomato juice in making this sauce.

An Economical Pudding.

A cottage pudding without eggs, butter or milk may seem like no pudding at all, but here is a recipe for peanut butter cottage pudding that is nutritious and good even though it contains none of these things. Moreover it is so hearty, that the main part of the meal may be somewhat less substantial than usual.

Peanut Butter Cottage Pudding.

1 teaspoonful salt.	¾ cupful peanut butter.
1 teaspoonful soda.	2 tablespoonfuls lemon juice.
1¾ cupfuls flour.

Sift the flour, salt and soda together. Combine the water, peanut butter, lemon juice and sugar, and stir in the dry ingredients. Beat the mixture thoroughly, bake it in muffin pans, and serve with chocolate or other pudding sauce. If desired, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder may be substituted for the soda and lemon juice.

Peanut Butter Drop Cookies.

Cookies with chopped peanuts in them or on the top have long been favorites in many families. Cookies made by the following recipe have the same rich flavor and are economical because the peanut butter replaces eggs, milk and butter in the ordinary recipes for sugar cookies, and are easy to make because the peanuts are already ground. Children, particularly, will enjoy these cookies if given to them with milk or with a simple dessert.

1 cupful peanut butter.	2 cupfuls flour.
1 cupful sugar.	1 teaspoonful salt.
2 tablespoonfuls lemon juice.	1 teaspoonful soda.
	1 cupful water.

Rub together the peanut butter, sugar and lemon juice, and add the flour, to which has been sifted the salt and soda. Gradually stir in the water. Drop the mixture by spoonfuls on a greased tin and bake for about 20 minutes in a moderate oven. If desired two teaspoonfuls of baking powder may be used instead of the lemon juice and soda.

Peanut Butter and Tomato Soup.

A soup as nutritious as the ordinary puree of vegetables may be easily made as follows:

1½ cupfuls tomato juice.	⅛ teaspoonful paprika.
½ cupful peanut butter.	2½ cupfuls boiling water.
1 teaspoonful salt.

Add the tomato juice gradually to the peanut butter, and when smooth add the seasonings and water. Simmer for ten minutes and serve with croutons. Well-seasoned soup stock may be substituted for the water; but, if used, the quantity of salt should be reduced.

PRESERVING FRUITS BY FREEZING URGED

Has More Natural Flavor Than Canned Product.

Useful in Making Ice Creams and Sherbets and for Cooking Pies, Preserves, Jellies and Various Other Desserts.

That the utilization of freezing storage for the preservation of berries, other small fruits and tomatoes could be profitably extended is the belief of specialists of the bureau of markets, United States Department of Agriculture. Many ice cream manufacturers and canners would be benefited by adopting practicable methods of holding such products for manufacturing purposes, say the specialists.

It is pointed out that the preservation of fruits by freezing is cheaper than canning them, especially when tin containers are scarce and costly as at present; and that the frozen fruit, held at the proper temperatures, has a more natural flavor than canned or dried fruit. The experimenters found fruit preserved by freezing to be fully as satisfactory as fresh fruit and superior to canned or dried fruit for use in making ice creams and sherbets, and for cooking into pies, preserves, jellies and other desserts and confections. The frozen fruits after thawing are not well suited for eating alone in a raw state, but are considered very palatable when eaten before they have completely thawed. When used as ingredients for desserts and confections best results will be obtained if they are combined before they are free from ice.

RABBIT PIE

Skin, draw and cut a rabbit into pieces; put into stew pan and cover with boiling water. Cook until very tender. Remove meat from the broth and concentrate the broth to about one-half. Pick the meat from the bones in as large pieces as possible. Thicken stock with one tablespoonful flour per cupful of broth and pour over meat. Add two tablespoonfuls salt and one-eighth teaspoonful pepper. Line the sides of a baking dish with crust, either a rich baking powder biscuit dough or pie paste, add meat mixture, cover with crust and bake in hot oven 30 minutes.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Steaks and chops are higher in price than roasts and contain more waste.

In ironing a shirt always iron the body part first, then the bosom and cuffs.

When making creamed tomato soup mix a little soda with a teaspoonful of corn starch and add it to the cream before pouring it into the tomato mixture. This will prevent curdling.

DAVIS FACES IMPORTANT JOB

Prominent Illinois Legion Man Heads Committee on Hospitalization and Vocational Training.

Gen. Abel Davis, who has been appointed chairman of the committee on hospitalization and vocational training of the American Legion, is a front-line soldier who won the Distinguished Service Cross and Croix de Guerre when he commanded the One Hundred and Thirty-second infantry in France.

General Davis was born in Chicago and received his education in Chicago schools. He attended Northwestern university, and served as a member of the Illinois legislature and also held the position of recorder of deeds of Cook county, Illinois. He is now vice president and trust officer of the Chicago Title and Trust company.

The military career of General Davis dates back to 1897, when he enlisted in the Illinois National Guard. He served as a private in the Spanish-American war and remained in the army afterwards. He attained the rank of major, and served for some time on the Mexican border. After a short period at Camp Logan with the One Hundred and Thirty-first infantry, he was promoted to colonel and given command of the One Hundred and Thirty-second infantry, which participated in a number of major offensives in France. He has received the rank of brigadier general in the Illinois National Guard.

PEOPLE FAVOR BONUS BILLS

New York, New Jersey, Washington and South Dakota Sanction the Proposition.

The passage of soldier bonus bills in New York, New Jersey, Washington and South Dakota by overwhelming majorities at the November elections is unquestionable proof of the public's recognition of veterans' claims, is the opinion advanced in an editorial which appeared recently in the American Legion Weekly.

"One-fourth of the five million men who served in the army and navy live in states which have shown their sense of justice by awarding compensation," the writer says. "Three-fourths of the veterans of the World war live in thirty-six states which have not faced the issue—in most of them because there have been no recent sessions of state legislatures.

"The United States senate will soon pass on the question of national compensation for World war veterans. Facing them squarely is the Fordney bill, adopted by the lower house. This bill will meet every test of justice. It is in accord with the sentiment of the people of the country as attested by the state bonus elections. Its passage by the senate will mark the fulfillment of a national obligation. The state bonuses are the expressions of a desire by the people to give a square deal. They do not lessen in any degree the federal responsibility, which cannot be avoided on the plea of state generosity."

NORTON IS NAMED ORGANIZER

World War Fighter Appointed Organizer of the Vermont Department of the Legion.

In keeping with the policy of the American Legion of electing real fighting men for its officials, Henry L. Norton, fifty years old, a fighter for four years and seven months in the Canadian and American armies during the World war, has been appointed organizer of the Vermont department of the Legion. Mr. Norton enlisted in the Canadian engineers in 1914, and served with them in France until 1917, when he received a commission in the American army. He served with the Three Hundred and Seventy-second infantry, attached to the One Hundred and Fifty-seventh French brigade from its arrival in France March 18, 1918, until he was discharged in February, 1919.

There Are Fronts and Fronts.

A mud-spattered doughboy slouched into the Y hut where an entertainment was in progress and slumped into a front seat.

Firm, kindly and efficient, a Y. M. C. A. man approached him saying: "Sorry, buddy, but the entire front section is reserved for officers."

Wearily the youth rose.

FIVE BILLS UP TO CONGRESS

Legion Legislative Committee Is Pressing Passage of Measures Important to World War Men.

Five bills are being pressed by the legislative committee of the American Legion at the present session of congress. Foremost among those in public interest is the Fordney bill, that provides adjusted compensation for all ex-service men, but more important in the eyes of Legion men are the Watson bill, the Rogers bill, the Stevenson bill and a sundry appropriation bill allowing $10,000,000 for hospital construction.

The Fordney, or "bonus" bill, passed the house in the last days of the last session of the Sixty-sixth congress. It then was referred to the senate finance committee, of which Senator Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania is chairman. Assurances were given that early hearings would be held on the bill.

The Fordney bill, as it stands now, provides a cash payment for all veterans up to and including the grade of captain, of one dollar a day for each day of home service, and $1.25 a day for foreign service, with a limit of $500 and $625, respectively. Or, the option of the same amount, plus 40 per cent if taken in the form of government certificates, assistance in the purchase of a home or farm or vocational training.

The Fordney bill, however, will be subordinated to the other four pet Legion measures, all of which aim at the improvement of the condition of the disabled. In this the legislative committee is following the mandate of the second national Legion convention, which went on record that "matters for the benefit of the sick and disabled are of first importance and are to be given preference over all other legislation affecting the welfare of the service men."

The Wason bill provides for 14 regional branches of the bureau of war risk insurance, as many sub-offices as may be necessary, and would make it possible for ex-service men to pay their government insurance premiums at any post office. It relieves from the payment of premiums disabled men in hospitals or taking vocational training and men temporarily disabled. It extends the time in which ex-service men may apply for hospitalization. It is a bill that would improve the efficiency of the war risk bureau and would give justice to the disabled. The Watson bill passed the house unanimously at the last session. It then was referred to a sub-committee of the senate finance committee.

The Rogers bill represents the efforts of the American Legion to obtain cooperation between the bureaus functioning for the benefit of disabled ex-service men. It provides for the transfer of the rehabilitation section of the federal board of vocational training and of the public health service to the jurisdiction of the war risk bureau. The plan is to have all the bureaus under one directing and responsible head, preferably a new cabinet officer.

The Stevenson bill would establish the same privilege of retirement for disabled officers of the emergency forces as is now enjoyed by officers of the regular army, a privilege already accorded by congress to emergency officers of the navy.

WELL KNOWN TO LEGION MEN

Gilbert Bettman, Chairman of the National Legislative Committee of the American Legion.

Gilbert Bettman, who was recently appointed chairman of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, is well known to many Legion members because he helped to draft the four-fold optional plan of adjusted compensation and, with James G. Scrugham, new national vice commander, presented it before the ways and means committee of the house of representatives.

Mr. Bettman was graduated from Harvard college and the Harvard law school with three degrees, and practiced law in Cincinnati until a short time after the outbreak of the war.

Appointed as assistant to the director of the bureau of war risk insurance, Mr. Bettman served in that capacity until the German offensive of March 21, when he was commissioned captain in the military intelligence division of the general staff.

Mr. Bettman attended the St. Louis caucus of the American Legion and the Minneapolis and Cleveland conventions. He has served as chairman of the war risk committee and as a member of the national beneficial legislative committee.

General Sherman Stuff.

It was a perfect French night. In other words, the rain was coming down steadily and the mud was at its stickiest. In "squab" formation—twos, threes, fives and sixes—a regiment of Buffaloes was moving into an alleged rest camp. The accent was on the camp.

The most forlorn of all the forlorn crew staggered against a barracks doorway where he was accosted by a white non-com.

"Well, Sam, whaddye think of this war now? Pretty good war?"

"Boss, dis yeah war never was a good war—and dis last day practically done ruined it com-pletely."—American Legion Weekly.

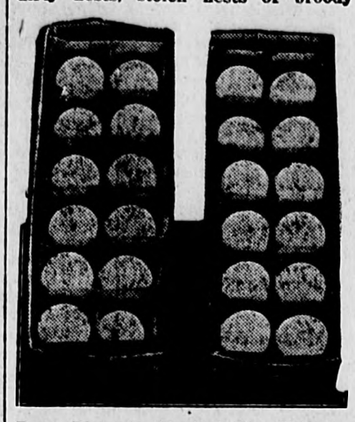

FARM POULTRY

PROPER MARKETING OF EGGS

Much of Animal Loss Can Be Prevented By Use of Purebred Stock and Better Care.

It is estimated that the annual production of poultry and eggs in the United States is in excess of $600,000,000—the value of the hay or the wheat crop—and it is also estimated that there is a total loss of nearly 8 per cent of the eggs marketed.

This great loss is due largely to improper handling between the farm and the market. Many farmers look upon eggs as a by-product, and the returns as so much clear gain. The hens forage for a living, and the eggs are gathered when convenient and kept almost anywhere. Such carelessness and a combination of mongrel stock, dirty nests, stolen nests of broody hens, unconfined males, late-maturing pullets, and other undesirable conditions explain why the product includes a high percentage of small, cracked, dirty, stale, heated, and even rotten eggs.

Occasionally the accumulations of all these kinds of eggs are taken to the country merchants and exchanged for merchandise. The merchant usually buys these eggs "case count," paying the same price for all kinds and sizes, provided they are eggs with an unbroken shell. Small production results in small or infrequent shipments.

Many of these losses, the United States Department of Agriculture says, can be prevented by selecting pure breeds that lay more or larger eggs, such as the Leghorns, Wyandottes, Plymouth Rocks, Rhode Island Reds, Orpingtons, etc.; giving better care, food, and shelter, with dry, clean, vermin-proof nests; confining males except in breeding season; collecting eggs frequently, especially in hot or muggy weather; storing eggs in a dry, clean, cool place; using small and dirty eggs at home; marketing frequently, with protection at all times from heat; selling for cash on a basis of size and quality, "loss off" instead of "case count"; using an attractive package; and combining shipments as a matter of economy.

MIXTURES TO KILL INSECTS

Combination of Gasoline, Crude Carbolic Acid and Plaster Paris Is Effective.

A satisfactory home-made mixture to kill lice on poultry consists of three parts of gasoline and one part of crude carbolic acid with as much plaster of paris as the liquids will moisten.

The material is allowed to dry a few hours and then placed in air-tight containers. The mixture has been tried out at the Ohio experiment station.

The powder should not be mixed or placed near a flame. It is necessary to hold the fowl while dusting in order to work the dust into the feathers thoroughly. Ten pounds of the mixture will treat 250 mature birds.

Mercurial ointment or "blue butter" has been found valuable for killing head lice frequently found on little chicks. Mercurial ointment is a stiff substance, and should be mixed with one or two parts vaseline to apply it easily.

A bit of the mixture the size of a pea applied with the tip of the finger and rubbed into the feathers about the head will destroy the lice. It should not be used too freely.

BEST ARRANGEMENT OF HENS

Erroneous to Mate Male With Too Many Females for Fertile Eggs and Strong Chicks.

Avoid the error of mating a male with too many females. One male to six or eight females of the American breeds, or 10 or 12 of the Mediterraneans, will give a higher percentage of fertile eggs and more vigorous chickens than if half as many males are used.

PUT TURKEYS IN CONDITION

Fowls Should Not Be Confined Except for Short Period Just Before Marketing.

Turkeys ought not to be confined for any length of time just for a short time prior to marketing. If fed liberally while they have a free run, they can be kept in condition for marketing within ten days.

Those Flattering Coat Dresses

OVER the horizon everywhere those attractive and sometimes confusing coat-dresses are emerging in a way that promises them a growing vogue. At first it seemed that they were designed to please women who long for slender lines when nature has decreed them opulent curves, but the slender women have seized upon the coat dress also, finding it just the thing in which to reveal their fashionable litheness. It does much for both types of figure and therefore is being developed into afternoon as well as street models, although its career began in the strictly tailored class.

The model shown at the right of the picture above belongs to the plainer, tailored class and is convincingly becoming to a full figure. It depends upon handsome embroidery on the collar and deep cuffs and about the three-quarter length sleeves to give it a rich flavor and has a narrow double belt of the material fastened with a small buckle at the front. The skirt portion is redeemed from plainness by simulated panels at the sides having round, cloth-covered buttons set in them.

At the left a dressier model appears in a cloth coat, worn over a satin underslip having satin sleeves. A folded collar of metal-brocade ribbon and pointed cuffs of the same lift it into the class of afternoon frocks and the slit at the sides of the skirt portion, outlined with fancy braid, gives additional interest. The belt is of the cloth.

The combination of two materials in these coat dresses is worth considering by women who have the remodeling of frocks in mind. Like the tunic dress, worn over underskirts in another material, the coat dress lends itself to combinations.

Rompers for the Tiny Girl

THE forehanded seamstress that keeps her needle busy doing spring sewing in the heart of winter, is concerned with new styles for the little folks just now. Everything for them may be made up for the coming spring and be out of the way when the time comes to consider things needed by their elders. An early Easter this year will put this time a little forward and thanks to the specialists who make children's clothes, there are plenty of new models in everything they wear and plenty of good patterns to guide the home seamstress in her work. The stores are full of attractive wash fabrics and the fashion papers abound with reports and pictures.

Rompers are steadily gaining in favor for tiny girls; the emancipation of their sex from any hindrance appears in such droll affairs as are shown in the picture above. Colored cotton goods and coarse linens make sturdy and pretty garments in which the small folks can run and tumble about to their hearts' content, and designers give rompers much of their attention. Most of the models turned out are suited to either sex, but occasionally one comes across something that has a distinctly feminine flavor like the amusing example in the picture in which the needlessly widened hip lines bespeak a feminine fancy. The neck and sleeves are finished with the buttonhole-stitched scallops. A little simple fancy stitching outlines a simulated yoke and calls attention to the exaggerated hip lines.

Moral Taught Chinese Children.

A warning to school children of China is given in the career of the unscrupulous Pang Kien, who cut off the ends of straws that his teacher told him to arrange evenly, while the careful and honest Sung Pin separated a similar bundle and laid the straws straight, one by one, and found that they were all of uniform length without cutting. The character thus manifested by the two showed their teacher which of his pupils would best repay his efforts, and his judgment was justified by the event, for Pang Kien came to no good, while Sung Pin won renown and wealth and great honor came through him to his preceptor.

The Useful and the Beautiful.

The useful encourages itself; for the multitude produce it and no one can dispense with it; the beautiful must be encouraged, for few can set it forth, and many need it.—Goethe.

Lore of the Dandelion.

It is an old custom to blow the feathery petals of the dandelion away with a message for an absent lover. The dandelion also decides the question as to whether there is a lover, whether he lives north, south, east or west, and if he is coming. The name of the flower is derived from the French word, dent de lion, signifying a lion's tooth. Since ancient times the plant has been used for medicinal purposes. It was used as a remedy for consumption, dropsy, and is believed to purify the blood.

First Campaign Emblem.

As far as known, the first campaign emblem was a finger ring of copper. It was worn by the adherents of John Quincy Adams in 1824, when he ran for president, and was inscribed "John Quincy Adams, 1825." Tintypes and medallions were among the insignia of the 1860 campaign.

NEW ORPHEUM

Holman Day, the noted author, created some remarkable characters for his gripping story of the Maine woods: "King Spuce", the Dial Film Company picturization of which starring Mitchell Lewis is announced by W. W. Hodkinson for presentation at the New Orpheum, South Weymouth, Saturday, Jan. 15.

Besides affording the star a role in which he easily sustains his reputation as the screen's premier actor of rugged types: "King Spruce" exacts some splendid characterizations from a number of screen favorites, who not only made a thorough study of the types in the Holman Day story before the first scene of the screen version was enacted but assisted Director Roy Clements in clothing the characters to make life-like the inhabitants of the Pine Tree forests.

Jackson Square From 1855 to 1860

Sixty or more years ago, Jackson Square was an irregular grass plot, much longer than the present curbed area, with a wagon track cutting across the upper side, and a sturdy young elm tree nearly in its center.

At that time the square was not at all ornamental, but very useful to the public generally, and to us small boys especially. Here we played various games, among them "leapfrog", "Ispiz", Long ball three and four", "Old cat" and "Old Sow."

I doubt if the boys of today ever played "Old Sow." First, we made a hole in the ground, as big as a quart bowl About this, in a circle, holes as big as a coffee cup; as many holes in all, as boys. Each boy had a bat, or a part of a broomstick, or rake handle. Then we "chose up" for the driver for the old sow (the ball). The other boys each took a hole, put the end of his bat in it, and the driver from outside started to drive the "old sow" into her pen—the center hole. Each boy watched his chance to drive it away; in doing so he left his hole empty, and if the driver got his bat into it before its owner got the other had to take the driver's place. If, as seldom happened, the driver got the sow into her pen he could name his successor. Sometimes a foot got hit instead of the ball which, as most of us were barefooted, was not at all funny for the victim.

Here, too, for several weeks each summer, stood what the boys called a "dog-type" saloon, whose owner took douerreotypes and later ambrotypes for the public. These saloons were narrow houses about 20 feet long on which with a door and steps at one end, the ower living in one end, and taking pictures in the other. For good pictures, a sunny day was necessary. Few old families of Weymouth are without a collection of these pictures, as clear and bright as the day they were taken.

At this time, or a little earlier, Broad street ended in Jackson Square. Between Jackson and Commercial Squares was a low wet meadow, coming up nearly to the back of the Peakes building, and extending to the railroad, through which the herring brook found its winding way. At this time the flow of water from the Bicknell meadow came to the surface in front of the easterly corner of the Gardner block. This water was clear and sparkling, coming from several springs at the easterly end of the meadow. Little or no street drainage flowed into this meadow, a fine mowing piece, the apple of its owner's eye. A few feet further down the slope it passed under the road and ran into the Herring brook below the fish-house.

Evidently the Broad street extension which for many years was called "The New Road" was intended as a short cut to the lower square, as both sides of it were low and wet and no value as building lots. The grade on the lower side of the square was much steeper than at present, the roadbed at the foot having been gradually raised several feet.

So much for Jacson Square itself. Our next article will tell something of its surroundings. O. L. DUNN

PRESENTATION

The Scotch friends and many others of Mr. and Mrs. William Allison met in Electa hall, Quincy, Jan. 7, to wish them "God speed and good luck" in the choice of a position out of the many Mr. Allison has been offered since cutting his connection with the Fore River yard. It took the form of a social and dance. During a lull in the evening, Mr. Allison was presented with a handsome leather bag and Mrs. Allison, a wrist watch. Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Lang did the honors in a rather humorous vein. Cake and ice cream were served during the evening, and at a later hour coffee and sandwiches.

Scotch readings were rendered by Mr. Adam Ord and thoroughly enjoyed by the large company. Another item which rather caught and tickled the crowd was the duet by the Misses Cummings and Ord. Other numbers were given by Miss Jeanie Rankin, Messrs Cummings, Young and Rankin. The company were also favored with the Highland Fling by Miss Isabel Lang. The fun was fast and furious and went on merrily till the "wee short oor ajout the twal." After which the company gathered around Mr. and Mrs. Allison and closed the finest social gathering that has been held for years, with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" and "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Committee, Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Lang and Mr. and Mrs. D. Rankin, who have to thank all the ladies who supplied cake, and others for their able assistance in dispensing the eats.

"AFTER SHE'S MARRIED—"

Synopsis. — Lonely and almost friendless, Tonnibel Devon, living on a canal boat with a brutal father and a worn-out, discouraged mother, wanders into a Salvation army hall at Ithaca, N. Y. There she meets a young Salvation army captain, Philip MacCauley. She is almost afraid to enter, but Philip assures her everyone is welcome and she hears from him, for the first time in her life, about God. She returns home and tells her mother about her visit.

CHAPTER II.

The Master of the Dirty Mary.

A week before this story opens, Uriah Devon had steamed the length of the lake, anchoring his boat as near Ithaca as he dared. Even to his wife, Edith, he had not confided why he had brought her to a town where yawning prison doors gaped for her every passing hour.

"I won't go, Riah," Mrs. Devon had cried when her husband had made the statement that he intended to visit Ithaca. "You couldn't get me near that place with a rope around my neck."

But the very fact that she now sat on a small bench against the boat rail, gazing moodily at the water, proved that Uriah Devon had contrived to have his way.

Occasionally Mrs. Devon lifted her head to listen and turned her eyes to the west where a narrow path zigzagged its length up the hill to the boulevard. Into her tortured soul had come a belief since the night before, that Tony's "Gloriest God," would send her man home.

Suddenly the sound of heavy footsteps in the forest path brought her sharply around. At last he was coming, this man she loved, perhaps drunk, perhaps to beat her; but nevertheless he was coming, and that was all she cared about.

Uriah Devon slowly walked up the gangplank in silence.

"Where you been?" the woman forced herself to say. But instead of repiying, he demanded:

"Where's Tonnibel?"

"I dunno," was the answer. "A minute ago she was over there not ten of your legs' jumps from here. . . . Where you been all this week?"

He'd been on a terrible spree, she decided. He looked as if he had been drunk for days. That he had something unusual on his mind, she knew, and she knew, too, it was about Tonnibel, for hadn't he asked for the kid the moment he'd returned?

"It's about time we was doing things, Ede," he said, turning grimly. "I've waited as long as I dared. Rege says 'Paul Pendlehaven hasn't an inch leeway before he's in his coffin.'"

Mrs. Devon's face grew deathly pale.

"What do you mean, honey?" she faltered.

"We live like rats in a hole," took up the man, after a pause, "while if Tony was made to do her part, we'd be on easy street. That's what I mean. We've got to have money and lots of it. Reggie's willing to marry the kid if you mind your business afterward. His marryin' her ain't sayin' he'll stick to her. But we got to have boodle, and we can't get it only through her."

"He shan't have 'er," the woman said, with hard tones and flashing eyes. "How many times 've I got to say it over to you? If that's the why you've come to Ithaca, you might as well turn the old scow north and go back again. He's a bum," she went on. "A dude and a fool and everything else that's bad. He's a thief, too."

Devon laughed.

"So am I, Ede," said he. "So 're you' for that matter. If Reggie knew that Tony was Paul Pendlehaven's kid, we wouldn't get one d——n cent of her money. He snitches from the Pendlehavens and his mother because he don't get cash enough other ways. A feller's got to have spendin' money."

"Pretty small pickin's," sneered Edith Devon. "Stealin' from folks almost in the grave ain't my style. Reggie's some second-story man, that young duffer is."

"You sneaked Paul's kid," taunted Devon. "He wouldn't be almost in his grave now if you'd kept your hands off'n Tony."

The woman turned on him savagely, paying no heed to his words.

"Get your blasted Reggie to steal enough for us all from the Pendlehavens," she said. "God knows they've got it and to spare. It's better'n handin' Tony over to 'im. He lives at Pendlehaven's, don't he?"

"He won't do it," cut in Devon. "Reggie ain't got the nerve to burn his fingers too deep. Paul Pendelhaven'd send him up for that, if he caught him. My plan is to get Tony married to Rege, and before the lid's screwed down on Pendlehaven's face, shove the girl in between John Pendlehaven and his precious cousin, Reggie's mother, and then Rege and me gets Tony's money, see?"

Edith shivered.

"I hear what you say," she muttered, "and I 'spose I'll do it if you promise not to let that pup hurt Tony when he gets her. . . . Best let's wait another year before talkin' marriage to her, though."

"Nothin' doin'," rasped the man. "Tony's almost a woman, and she's eatin' her head off. After she's married—"

"You two men'll rag the kid to death or do something worse to her," gritted the woman. "Well, you won't! Rather'n have that I'll tell her she ain't ours. I'll go right bold to Paul Pendlehaven and blurt him the truth. I'll do it today if you keep naggin' at me."

Devon studied her face, his own distorted with rage.

"You'll do no such a thing, mad woman," he returned, running his tongue over his dry, cracked lips. "If you get me in a temper you'd better look out. Reggie knows Tonnibel's got rich folks, but he don't know who they are. You spill the beans, by G—d, and the lake for yours."

The woman's gaze sought the sheet of blue water.

"She'll grow a beard a mile long before I tell 'er," she said finally, bringing her eyes back to his face. "Tell 'er yourself, and see how you like it!"

There was a ring of revolt in her tones that brought an expression of surprise to the man's face, leaving it angrily, frowningly red. But the sound of a girl's voice on the hill brought him suddenly to his feet.

"There she is, by G—d," he cried abruptly. "Now if you want any more lovin's from me—more'n that, if you want to stay where I live, you got to do my will."

"Uriah, honey, darlin'," cried Edith, "don't say that. I've always stuck by you."

"Then keep a stickin'," growled Devon. "For God's sake, if the brat ain't lugged that pig clean up that pine tree!"

"Go On and Finish Me."

Above them a giant pine tree lifted its head far above its fellows. Among its branches the man and woman could plainly see the upper half of a girl's figure settled in the crotch of an outspreading limb, and clasped in two slender arms was the small guinea pig. She bobbed her head gravely, held up the animal and shook it at them.

Tony, herself, little knew why in times of strife she sought refuge among these forest giants and came always to happiness. They were animated beings in her mean little world and because she had showered idolatrous love on them they, from their primeval grandeur, sent an answering spark of life to her starved little soul. The sight of Tony further enraged Uriah. He waved her in.

"Now tell her outright, and get it over, Ede," he said, sitting down again.

Reaching the canal boat, Tony stood looking at her parents.

"Set down," growled Devon.

Shifting the pig a little, she dropped down on the deck. She always dreaded these talks with her father and mother. It usually meant they must move on, or perhaps that a thrashing was coming her way. From under her long lashes she glimpsed first Devon with his frowning brow, then at length let her gaze settle on the woman.

"I s'pose I been doin' something hellish," she ventured presently in a low tone. "Have I, Edie?"

"Nope, not this time, Tony," thrust in Devon. "But we've got to tell you something. You're gettin' to be a woman, Tonnibel, and you got to do something for your mother and me."

"I'm always wantin' to do something nice for you, Edie, darling," she said, looking at her mother. "Yap it out quick, sweet, and I'll jump to do it!"

The woman began to cry softly.

"Go on, Edie," said Uriah. "Why in h—l are you blubberin' over a thing you can't help?"

"But I can help it," cried Edith. "And what's more I will. Run away, baby, and I'll have it out with your pop while you're gone."

Devon reached forward and laid a strong detaining hand on the girl's arm.

"It's this," he got out between his teeth. "You got to get married. You been livin' on me long enough."

The girl stared at him blankly.

"Get married," she repeated dully. "Who'd marry a brat like me? I'm nothin' but a kid yet, and I'm goin' to stay right here with my mother. See? I don't have to—do I, mummy darlin'?"

"Your ma's word ain't law on this boat," answered Uriah in an ugly tone. "Mine is, though. Fire ahead, Edie, and tell the kid my will."

Mrs. Devon coughed spasmodically and toyed with the fabric of her skirt. A slender brown hand went up and closed over her twitching fingers.

"I wouldn't marry any of the mutts you know, daddy," the girl burst out in desperation. "So get that notion clean out of your mind."

Her face settled sullenly into little lines that pursed up the lovely young mouth, and Uriah Devon moved his feet nervously. Perhaps his task wasn't going to be so easy after all.

"Kid," he said huskily, "if you don't do what you're told, I'll make you. You ain't too old to gad yet. And you'll be missin' one of the best lickin's you ever got if you mind what I tell you."

The girl eyed him curiously, making a sidewise gesture with her head.

"Who's the duffer you've chose out for me?" she asked at length. "You might as well tell me."

"My friend, Reggie," said Devon, bending over and staring at her.

Tonnibel's mouth widened until two rows of teeth gleamed through the red of her lips. She made a wry face. "Nothin' like that for me—eh, Edie?"

Edith Devon was coming to a resolution that meant trouble for herself and for Tonnibel.

"I ain't fought it all out with your daddy, kid," she sniffled weakly. "You get to the cabin and mend them old clothes."

Uriah Devon laid his pipe beside him and uttered an oath.

"You'll stay right here, brat," he gritted, "and pay heed to me."

"Uriah," screamed the woman, "if you go on with this, I'll tell 'er all I know. I swear I will. Tony, honey, Tony, baby, I—I ain't—"

With a roar the man sprang forward and in his effort to reach his wife knocked the girl flat on the deck. When Tonnibel rolled over and sat up, her mother was stretched along the boat rail, and Devon was standing over her. She lay so dreadfully still and limp that the girl scrambled to her feet.

It wasn't the same Tony who had come fearfully to them but a short period before with the little pig in her arms; nor the same girl who had swung in the treetops making play fellows of the squirrels and answering the shrill calls of the forest birds. She seemed suddenly to have grown taller, and as she flung herself on Devon, the very strength of her little body sent him sprawling against the side of the cabin. "Now you killed her, d—n you," she screamed. "If you kick 'er—I'll—I'll—" She dropped at the side of her mother, her threat broken in two by the awful pallor on the woman's face. "Oh, God, mummy darlin', mummy darlin'," she ended in a bitter cry.

Growling in rage, Devon turned on her.

"Mebbe I have killed 'er," said he. "If so, I'll make a good job of it and finish you too."

The girl rose before him, her eyes blazing into his, her little fists clenched together.

"Folks that murder other people, Pappy Devon," she shot back, "get strapped in a chair, and they get lightning run through 'em. Go on and finish up! Go on and finish me! I'd ruther have you kill me than make me marry that old Reggie."

As if his name had brought him out of the forest, Reginald Brown walked down the Hoghole path.

"My baby, Caroline Pendlehaven, aged six months."

United States' Bad Lands.

This is the translation of "Mauvaises Terres," the term used by the French-Canadian trappers to describe those regions of unconsolidated rocks that have been extensively eroded. Bad lands occur on arid plateaus formed by horizontal strata of loosely cemented sands and gravels. The best examples of such regions are found in the upper portion of the Missouri drainage basin, in the vicinity of the Black hills. Some are to be found also in Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

Baptism in Cyprus.

A baptism in Cyprus is a curious ceremony. The infant is rubbed with oil by his godfather, blown upon in the face by the priest and waved in the air, then dipped several times in the font, and again anointed with oil on various parts of the body.

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

SELF-DETERMINATION.

"That hat is very becoming to you, sir," said the polite salesman.

"'Becoming,' eh?" growled the irascible old gentleman. "What do you think I am—a fool or a dude? I'm no fussy woman buying a bonnet and I don't care a hoot about how a hat looks on me. All I want is something to keep the rain and sun off my bald head."

"Yes, sir," replied the clerk, meekly. "That's a serviceable hat, and if you are not a married man you should worry about the way it looks on you." —Birmingham Age-Herald.

Applied Finance.

"My father has a controlling interest in that business."

"I am sorry to hear he is taking such chances."

"What on earth do you mean by his taking chances in such a sound investment?"

"Well, my father says the bigger the interest the greater the risk."

TACTLESS

Manager: So the great critic invited you to dine with him?"

Actor: Yes, but his choice of menu was not only utterly without tact, but also cruelly suggestive.

Manager: Dear me! What was it?

Actor: He actually put me down to what he called a good roast.

HOMEMADE WINDOW VENTILATORS.

The purpose of a window ventilator is to provide ventilation without creating a direct draft.

In Figs. 1 and 6 are shown two types of ventilators.

The ventilator in Fig. 1 is a wooden frame covered with cheesecloth. It is made of the exact width of the window sash, and it is hinged at its center to fold (Fig. 2) to permit slipping its ends into the groove that the window-sash slides in. When the ends are slipped into place, the framework can be straightened by pushing upon the center; with the window-sash lowered the framework will be held securely.

Prepare strips A (Fig. 3) of a length equal to the width of the window opening, by 1 inch or 1½ inches wide; prepare strips B and C 6 or more inches long, according to how large a ventilating area you want. Make strips B of the width of Strips A, and strip C one-half again as wide. Fasten strips B between the ends of strips A, with nails, and fasten strip C at the center. Draw a line along the center of the length of Strip C, and across strips A. The frame is to be sawed apart along this line, but saw it only part way through, now. Get a pair of hinges, locate them as shown at D, and start the screw holes; then tack the cheesecloth covering to the framework, as indicated in Fig. 2. With the cloth put on, screw the hinges in place, and from the opposite side saw through strip C and strips A. By sawing through now, you will have no difficulty in getting the halves hinged in perfect alignment. Strip E (Fig. 1), nailed to the upper edge of the framework, forms a lap over the window-sash; this prevents the ventilator from pushing out when in place.

Fig. 4 shows the ventilator in position, and Fig. 5 shows a scheme for a safety-lock. A common hinge about 2 inches square is required. Screw one flap to the upper window-sash, and let the other flap swing free. When the free flap is turned to extend over the lower sash, as shown, it prevents the sash from opening beyond that point; when folded flat, the lower sash can slide past it.

The ventilator in Fig. 6 is made of a board 8 or 10 inches wide, by as long as the window-sash is wide, and two tomato cans. Remove the cut end of the cans. Then cut two openings through the ventilator board, of just the right size for the cans to fit in (Fig. 7). Hinge the board at its center as directed for the other type of ventilator, and saw the board in half. Then fasten the cans in the openings by running wires through holes punched through their sides, twisting the wire end into loops, and driving screws through the loops into the board (Figs. 6, 8 and 9). A strip nailed to the upper edge of the board, to project, as shown, will complete the ventilator.

YARN WINDERS AND A WORK-BOX.

Take your choice of yarn holders. Perhaps in addition to a holder you will want a work-box like that shown in the illustration.

The yarn holder shown in Fig. 1 is made out of a breakfast food carton and a square piece of board.

The three-pound size of breakfast-food carton is best for the holder. Cut off enough of the top to make the depth of the box 5 inches. Also, cut out the center of the cover, leaving a rim ½ inch wide around the edge, as indicated by dotted line in Fig. 2. Fit the cover over the box, then you will be ready to cover both the box holder and the board base with cretonne or other material. Fasten the material to both sides and all edges of the base, and bring it up over the carton sides and fasten it inside of the open top. Tack the holder to the center of the base.

The work-box shown in Fig. 3 should contain all of the requisites of a knitter. You can make it out of a soap box. Figure 4 shows how to hinge the cover to the box by gluing pieces of tape to both the cover and box. Finish the outside of the box and cover with cretonne, carrying the edges of the goods over the box edges and tacking them along the inside. Then line the inside of the box and cover with a suitable lining material. Also form several pockets inside the box along the back, as shown, and tack tapes to the inside of the cover to form loops through which to slip scissors and knitting needles. Fasten tapes to the cover near the ends, and to the inside of the box ends, of just the right length to allow the cover to drop back as far as shown in Fig. 3. The illustration shows a yarn-holder like that in Fig. 1, in one corner of the work-box. To keep the holder in place in the corner, tack the holder covering to the box lining with stitches. Spools fastened to the bottom of the box at the corners will complete the work-box.

The yarn-holder in Fig 5 requires a large flower-pot. One measuring 7 inches across the top is about right. It also requires a board base. A piece of board 10 or 12 inches square and 1 inch thick will be right. The heavier the base board is the more solidly the holder will stand. Figure 6 shows how the pot should be fastened to the base with a screw driven through the hole in the bottom.

Smooth up the board with sandpaper, and sandpaper the edges to take off their sharpness. Finish both the base and holder with two coats of paint. This holder can be made more attractive by stenciling a design on the rim of the pot.

When a large ball of yarn is being used, place a block in the bottom of the pot to bring the ball up higher.

NORFOLK COUNTY HISTORY

By Alexander Stoddart

Motorists throughout the country have been entertained on their tours by the big historical books of the United States Tire Company along the highways. These books have come to be one of the things of greatest interest in a motor journey, whether it be in Maine or California.

In this county the towns of Dedham, Milton, Quincy, Stoughton, Wellesley, Weymouth and Wrentham are featured. Massachusetts is particularly rich in historical lore and the number of boards in the state is large.

Of Weymouth, it is recorded that it is the second oldest town in Massachusetts, being founded in 1622. Originally it was the site of the Indian village of Wessagusset and of Miles Standish's encounter with the Indians.

Dedham, one of the oldest towns in Massachusetts, settled in 1635, is the possessor of three historic trees, the Avery Oak, used for the model of the town seal, and the site of the first religious meeting of the town; the Court Street Elms and the Oak in village pound. The latter tree has been decorated with a legend which says: "This Pound Built about 1700, circumference of oak, 19 feet."

The Avery Oak, incidentally the oldest white oak in Dedham, has the distinction of having once being selected as suitable material for the frigate "Old Ironsides", now anchored off Charlestown. William Avery, its owner, was offered $70 to cut down the tree for use in the famous frigate, but admiration for the old oak, which had much sentiment for Mrs. Avery, resulted in sparing the tree.

Many years ago, lightning made a deep furrow, but with surgical assistance, the tree has outgrown the adversities of former years. In 1886, Joseph H. Clark presented the tree and the ground on which it stands to the Historical Society and it is still owned and cared for by that organization.

Incidentally Dedham established in 1664 the first public school in America, which was supported by a general tax.

Modern history appears on the outdoor display telling of Milton. It is stated that "on Great Blue Hill, Milton, in 1885, Abbott L. Rotch erected Blue Hill Observatory at his own expense. Rotch was the first meteorologist in the United States to measure the height and velocity of clouds."

Quincy's history goes back to the Revolutionary days. It is recorded that on Penn's Hill, Quincy, a high stone cairn marks the spot where Abigail Adams and her son watched the smoke and flame of the Battle of Bunker Hill on June 17, 1775.

It is also recorded that Quincy was John Hancock's birthplace and briefly follows a high point in American history, thus: "It was the attempt to capture John Hancock and Samuel Adams, members of the Provincial Congress meeting in Concord in April 1775, that led to the battle of Lexington."

The "open book" telling of Stoughton says that it was incorporated in 1726 and named for William Stoughton, Governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony. It was Stoughton, it will be recalled, who, as a member of the Council of Safety, wrested the government from Governor Andros in 1689.

Wellesley College is featured in telling the story of Wellesley, the university being founded in 1875 by Henry Fowe Durant.

A bit of Revolutionary history is also told on the Roadside display entering Wellesley, which says: "When the news of the battle of Lexington, (April 19, 1775), came to Wellesley, a gun was fired three times as a signal, the 'Minute Men' gathered and the women built large fires to mould bullets."

Of Wrentham, the interesting disclosure is made that it is the home of Helen Keller, "The Girl who found the Bluebird", who despite being blind, deaf and dumb, graduated from Radcliffe College and is devoting her life to aiding the blind.

—Yes, men have to live and learn. But it does seem as if some of us have to live an awful lot to learn a very little.—Moberly (Mo.) Monitor.

TEACHING YOUNGSTERS HOW TO BOX

When the ships of the American Navy touch at Gibraltar and when after having seen the sights ashore there is no other recreation, our bluejackets often amuse themselves by teaching the little native boys the manly art.

The above picture shows a couple of little sons of Sunny Spain about to start a "set-to" after posing for their pictures. They are evenly matched, and as Paddy Ryan, the veteran Navy trainer and referee would say: 'May the best man win'.

WILBUR THEATRE, BOSTON

"When We Are Young", Kate Mc Laurin's charming comedy of youth and love, now in its third week at the Wilbar Theatre will start its fourth week Monday evening, Jan. 17. This triple-starred Shubert production is packing the house at every performance, and its fine delicate pleasing humor has made an unremovable impression on Boston theatre-goers.

Alma Tell, Henry Hull and George Marion, the three stars of this delightful little play are all Boston favorites. Miss Tell won the hearts of Boston with her portrayal of the girl in: "The Hearts of Youth'," while Henry Hull won universal commendation here in "The Man Who Came Back." George Marion is known to Boston audiences by hundreds of delightful delineations, now only appealing to the younger generation, but also to those who remember the old Boston Theatre in its palmy days.

George Marion plays the part of a faithful old darky, who sticks to his master through thick and thin, and his characterization has caused one of the big theatrical sensations of the year.

SHUBERT THEATRE

"The Passing Show" Messrs Lee and J. J. Shubert's rendevous of radiantly restless runabouts in rhythmic rhymes and rambles, begins its fourth all-conquering week at the Shubert Theatre next Monday evening, Jan. 17. Eighth of these massive, masterly maidsome revues which have made the Winter Garden famous, the present production outshines its predecessors in magnitude, in beauty, in personnel, in cuties and in popularity. It is a cyclone cellar stocked against perpetual prohibition; a sovereign remedy for all ills, physical or psychic; a pulsating sunbeam crystalized into the joy of life.

Its scenes range from the haven of the gods, where there is no prohibition of any kind, to a modern ballroom, where the Eighteenth Amendment is the only prohibition. Between the scenes depicting the well-dressed gods, and the somewhat more lightly garbed ladies of the modern ballroom, come visits to such unusual places as a water lily pond in blooming time, to King Solomon's kitchenette on a Thursday, to King Solomon's court on one of his numerous wedding days, to Florence—the city—at the period when the original Barrymore brothers played the original "Jest", and to divers places which must be seen to be appreciated.

A GOOD GARDEN

By Edward Lukeman

A good garden, well planned and cared for, is one of the joys of life. Did you have a good one the past year? Did the people who passed by say, that is the best garden on this street. If so, you felt proud and you had a right to be.

But stop and ask yourself this question, what is it that enables you to have such a good garden. The work you did would not in itself produce such a good one. You will have to go back farther.

There was a time when a strong man with an axe over his shoulder started to clear the woods just where your garden lay. He brought his wife and little ones with him and his first work was to build them a tent of brush and only hemlock boughs for a roof. Every time it rained it was wet inside, and more than one night the man stood at the door, keeping watch over his dear ones while the wind or wild animals woke the night echoes with their wild shrieks.

That man felled the trees and cleared the land in order to make room for a better home, and he did it with a song and a great hope in his heart. He looked down the years and saw the land that was to be That was his life work. Humble work done with patience, and all the greater because it was done out of love for those who came after he had laid down his axe for the last time.

That man's shadow lengthening down the years falls on the garden that is now yours. If he had gone round the hard places and left the trying things undone it would have changed the destiny of your whole life, and this is your starting point The first settlers could not do all that was to be done; in fact could not do more than they did. The hands with which they toiled were well nigh bare of tools. An axe and a crude plow were his implements. His oxen helped him to roll up the logs in order to build a log cabin, and out of one of these cabins came one of the greatest and most popular presidents of the United States.

It is singular, though none the less striking and true, that agriculture that the entire world depends upon for existence, was the last to profit by the use of improved machinery. The introduction of the reaper, the binder, the thresher and the mowing machine are all within the memory of many persons now living today. While the corn planter, the cultivator and other tractor are all of recent introduction. I mention this, not in any fault-finding way, but to show you how hard it was in the pioneer days and what courage it took to get the land into condition to produce food. If it was not for the improved farm machinery food would be a great deal less plenty and prices very much higher than now prevail.

If you refer to the last census of the United States Department of Agriculture and see how many boys and girls who have left the farms for the city, the result will be startling, and you will wonder how long it will be before food will have to be imported into this country, instead of exported, as it is at the present time.

But there is a bright side to this picture, as well as a dark one, and that is, while the farms have been depleted from almost all the best workers, the total acreage planted to the staple crops remains about the same, and this has been made possible by the use of improved machinery mentioned above.

Some of the readers of this column are apt to say, well this happened so long ago that nothing of this kind is being done now. But there is, it's being done in Wisconsin, Minnesota and the far West right along. I knew a doctor who went to Northern Wisconsin and did this very thing, and now has one of the show farms in that prosperous farming state.

However, I never would recommend this way to anyone. I have always thought it would be better to purchase a place on a mortgage, and pay for it as you go along. But the objection to this is, you have to have some ready money and if you make a failure you will probably lose what you have paid in, while the other way won't require any cash payments; it will take money to live until the land is cleared so a wheat crop can be grown and before this is done many a man has tired, folded his hands, and said, I am not going to do any more, let somebody else go on with my work. Don't let this be said in your case, but keep on trying and when the final summons comes it will be said of you "he made his place one of earth's beauty spots and the world is all the better for his having lived in it.

QUINCY THEATRE

Manager Black of the Quincy Theater announces two big super attractions by the Al Luttringer Stock Company; "Kick In", Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. A. H. Woods greatest success and "Under Two Flags" Thursday, Friday and Saturday, David Belasco's great success.

"Kick In", a play with a "kick." It was during the past summer that a friend of Manager A. H. Woods wrote to him from San Francisco that he had just read one of the most remarkable plays ever written and suggested that he get in touch with one Willard Mack, actor and author, better known on the Coast than in the East. Mr. Woods wired his friend to "Rush Scenario." The message was handed to Mr. Mack and that night the actor-author sat for hours and finally condensed the scenario of "Kick In" into 50 words and sent it by lettergram to the New York manager. The next day the San Francisco representative of Mr. Woods waited upon Mack with a telegram authorizing him to accept the play on liberal terms and to advance the money for the author's immediate journey to the metropolis. Before Mack arrived, five days later, Mr. Woods had already cast the play, and before the amazed author had time to make some suggested changes, rehearsals had already begun. This is the play that set all New York athrill; the play that made the reviewers hunt for synonyms for "absorbing" and "engrossing" and "captivating", and which has proven to be sensational success of a notable season.

To reveal the story of "Kick In" would be unfair to author and auditor. Suffice it to say that although it deals with crime there is not a real criminal in the entire roll of its characters; that although it deals intimately with the police and police methods, it is in no sense of the word acondemnation of the officers of the law; that, although filled with love interest, the hero and the heroine are man and wife, and cupid does not have to tax his ingenuity to keep the pair together, as he is so often called upon to do in the usual play. For "Kick In" is not the usual play. It is an entirely "different" play, with a "kick" in every line, and yet replete with humor; for every thrill there are a dozen laughs. Mr. Mack has drawn his characters from real life and it is the ring of sincerity that gives the final "punch" to this most remarkable of dramas. Mr. Woods has cast the play in superb disregard of cost and the performance is quite as remarkable as the wonderful gripping story.

The play for the last half of the week, entitled: "Under Two Flags", one of David Belasco's greatest stage successes, has broken all records where it has been played before. The play deals upon the French Army and Algeres and of a girl who was named "Cigarette" as a nick-name by one of the regiments, who considered her their mascot. Many thrilling and exciting scenes occurred during her army life with this famous regiment. The climax of the day deals on the heroism of this girl and her death. This is considered one of the best plays ever been played on an American stage.

The feature picture for the first three days of the week, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday is entitled: "Something to Think About", one of De Melle's famous books. It is a 6-reel paramount picture.

The feature picture for the last three days of the week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday is entitled: "Little Miss Rebellion" featuring Dorothy Gish as the leading role. This is also a Paramount picture. The Pathe Weekly will also be shown at both shows.

The Sunday Benefit concert will also be held at 8 P. M. by the Quincy Lodge of Elks, for the benefit of the Johnson family.

THE BEST METHOD

From the Postmaster General's report for fiscal year ending June 30, we read:

"Judging not only from the increase in the weight of the mailings of second class matter during the fiscal year, but from general observation and report, the publishers of the country as a whole have enjoyed a most profitable year. Notwithstanding advances in the rates charged for inserting advertisements, newspapers and periodicals are being more extensively used than ever as an advertising medium, and many publications are unable to carry all the advertisements offered. This method of distributing advertising matter and promoting publicity is at once the cheapest and most economical, all things considered."

Newspaper advertising— the most economical method on the market. Try it and be convinced.

The Postmaster-General's report says so and gives this example.

An advertisement inserted at a cost of $10 in a publication having 10,000 circulation will in this way reach at least that many persons for $90 less than the mere expense of postage alone to send the advertising matter through the mails at the third-class rate of postage to the same number of individuals. There is, however, a much greater saving through the elimination of the expense for stationery, envelopes and addressing, and it will readily be seen that the dissemination of advertising through newspapers and periodicals is highly economical and advantageous."

A Good Angel

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Marrin flung down his pack, saying angrily to Wilton: "So you call this a camp! I call it, rather—a fake."

"What a pity," Wilton answered with a grim smile, "since you are likely to stay in it for a month—maybe longer. You know the bargain—"

"I know what you said of things," Marrin retorted. "If you had told the truth, my mother—"

"That'll be all from you right now," Wilton broke out sternly. "If you were not what you are—a shadow, not a man—I would wash my hands of you before tomorrow morning."

"But—since I am weak and ill, you want me for a son, eh?" Marrin taunted. "All you Legion fellows think it is easier, also pleasanter, to marry money than to make it. Let alone waiting for a grateful country—"

Wilton caught the other man's wrists, held them immovable for a minute, then loosed them; his eyes suddenly filled with infinite pity—roused by the tremors, the heat he felt in the other's flesh. In a kind, steady voice he began: "Billy—I know what shell-shock does to a fellow—how it seems to kill his right soul and put a devil instead of it. Let me help you to dislodge that devil. You know that is why we are here.

"Doctor Lyne says your one chance of getting back is quiet, good care, good food and exercise in this healing pine woods air. Try to remember that—remember, too, you are here by your own volition—you were keen enough about coming only yesterday. Ask yourself what motive I could possibly have in bringing you here, except a sincere wish to help you save yourself!"

Marrin apparently was not listening. Suddenly he broke out: "See the new moon. Moon, is Anna looking at you, too? She promised—you know she did! Do you think she will break her word?"

Up Rose a Slim Figure.

Wilton strolled softly away, not daring to remain. Anna Delna was hardly likely to be looking at new moons upon the eve of her wedding. She was not deserting a sick man in cold blood—instead she had fallen out of love with him while he was away—compassion had kept her from breaking with him openly at first—later, when she knew the shock might kill or craze him, she had temporized, keeping him deluded in a fool's paradise, wherein there was no forecasting beyond the day.

Then her new fiance had demanded imperiously immediate marriage. It was because of this that Marrin's mother had prevailed upon Tommy Wilton to take her poor child into the deep silent wilderness. Wilton had known his task would be hard—just how hard, though, until now, he had not realized.

As he went about necessary tasks Marrin sat relaxed against a pine trunk, his eyes on the moon, his face blissful. His ill humor had vanished—he came cheerily enough at the call to supper; after it smoked a pipe in smiling silence, and presently flung himself on the bed of fresh boughs, where inside of a minute he was sleeping heavily. Wilton was thankful—it was long since he had slept naturally. If the healing of the pine woods began thus early might it not make whole the shattered creature? Unless it did—Wilton would not think further. He loved Marrin, in spite of the ten years between them, as though he were of his own blood. Yet there was no truth in Marrin's taunt—Wilton revered Lucia Merrin as a saint rather than loved her as a woman. She had carried weight so gallantly, faced down ill luck with a courage, faith and charity that showed her quality to be rare indeed.

Gallant lies had veiled the disgrace of an unfaithful husband when he died. Only his wife and his old lawyer had ever known the truth; Wilton had guessed it intuitively. Lucia had sent her twin sons to the army almost joyously—glad of their chance to redeem the name and blood. One had fallen among the first and farthest forward; there remained to her only this heart-breaking wreck.

Heart-wrenching tragedy—yet Wilton held fast to hope. It grew with the morning. Marrin was almost boisterous in spirits. "You promised me wild strawberries," he said gayly after breakfast. "Unless you make good—well, awful things may happen to you."

The berries gemmed the grass of a natural meadow a mile or more from camp, but the tramp did not tire Marrin. He flung himself down beside the first ruby cluster he spied, shouting like a boy and cramming his mouth with fruit.

Then twenty yards off up rose a slim figure, beautiful—yet Wilton started at sight as though it were a ghost. No ghost but a living likeness of Anna Delna, in pose, features, coloring. How would Marrin bear sight of it? Wilton watched him with a wildly thumping heart, as he sprang erect, and made three paces toward the stranger, his face illumined, his hands outstretched. Suddenly they fell lifelessly—he began to stammer excuses. The girl nodded comprehension, stepped forward and offered him her hand, saying: "So glad to happen on you so early—we are camping, too—mother and I—the milk boy told us there was a soldier-gentleman just come. Welcome to the pine woods. No better place in the world to forget—things better-forgotten."

"You are right, indeed," Wilton said, approaching. Inside of five minutes he had placed himself and Marrin, and found out that the girl, Anna's double, was Mary Prevost, her cousin.

Three days later he said to her aside: "You must realize the situation—do you realize the danger of it?"

"To him, you mean?" Mary flung back, her head high. "You—you can't think I would be so heartless as to—hurt him? I felt like murdering Anna when she told me—that is why I—oh, never mind. Maybe if I can make him content, until nature saves him—what I am doing will be justified."

"It needs no justifying," Wilton said, lifting her hand reverently to his lips. "Unconsciously Billy is beginning to love you—helped by the sense that it is deadly wrong. This is in his gleams of normality—they grow steadily. Encourage him to form a habit of loving you—if you want to save him from worse than death."

"I have loved him—always," she said under breath. "He did not dream it—but that made no difference. I was so much younger he hardly noticed me—you saw he met me as a total stranger—"

"You are—his good angel," Wilton interrupted. "He is indeed fortunate to have your love added to his mother's idolatry."

Time ambled withal there in the pine woods. Marrin ceased to talk of Anna—he even veered away from the subject when Wilton daringly mentioned her. One night he sat smoking until almost dawn, yet roused from short sleep, clear-eyed and smiling, to say to Wilton: "Take me back—I must straighten things with Anna. She will understand when I tell her about Mary—but until I am free—"

"You were free before we came here," Winton interrupted, running on into a sketchy explanation. Marrin listened intently—then gave a joyous shout and set off running. Wilton had no need to ask why. He knew the goal—Mary Prevost, the good angel.

OF THE GAY SECOND EMPIRE

Social Stunts That Included the Appearance of Company From the Comedie Francaise.

Gay hunting parties marked the second empire in France and after the hunts a theatrical performance was always included, and when this was presented by the members of the Comedie Francaise they enjoyed the distinction of being received in the royal box. Invitations on these occasions were greatly prized, as were those to the ball that was given on the empress' name day, November 15, and on which from 20,000 to 30,000 francs used to be spent, the Detroit News recalls. But when the more formal entertaining was over, "eccentricities" of many kinds were permitted. There were English ladies who enjoyed the privilege of being included in these less conventional parties.

The costumes of the latter were something wonderful to behold. The cloth skirt, which had then been recently introduced from England, and the cloth dress draped over it enabled their wearers to defy all kinds of weather. As they went tramping down the muddy roads, their coquettish little hats daintily poised on enormous chignons, their talking boots displaying more than the regulation part of ankle, the less sophisticated Compeignois stared with all their might at the strange company from the chateau.

New Cure for Hiccoughs.

In one of the serious paragraphs in the amusing "Humour of a Parish" by Rev. W. B. Money, the author passes on an "infallible" cure for hiccoughs. "Laugh as much as you like," he says, "but try it the next time you are in the grasp of hiccoughs. Take a tumbler and fill it up half full of water, put your lips to the opposite side of the rim to what you ordinarily would in drinking, tilt the glass away from you instead of toward you, and so sip the water. That is all, but you will want nothing more."

No Parking Here

By R. RAY BAKER

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Will you go for a ride, Martha?" Dale Long's invitation was answered with such a bewitching smile that he was almost convinced Martha Howe was going to accept. If she did it would be a big score in the game of love he had been playing for the last six months.

The trouble with the game of love was that it never appeared to develop beyond the solitaire stage. Dale seemed to be playing it alone, although he was more than anxious to entice Martha into the play as an opponent or partner. The two are synonymous when used in connection with the game in question.

But Martha was a business woman of the first magnitude, if you care to classify her in sidereal terms. She was in the fire insurance business on her own account during working hours, and at other times she was campaigning for a sister politician in the approaching election. Get a girl mixed up in business and politics and when does a mere man get a look-in?

During the last half year Martha Dale had lived next door. Before she entered politics Dale had spent some time with her, but never had he been able to summon sufficient courage to broach matrimonial matters. About the time he had succeeded in mustering the required courage Martha got interested in politics, and now her would-be wooer had no opportunities.

Several times he had succeeded in getting her into his roadster for a ride as far as her office, but that was too short a spin for proposing purposes. If he tried to drive slowly the traffic cops were sure to urge him to greater speed in order to keep the lanes clear.

But today Dale felt reasonably sure of success, because it was Susan B. Anthony's birthday anniversary and he knew Martha, ardent suffragist that she was, had proclaimed it a holiday as far as the insurance business was concerned. So Dale was careful to have his machine waiting, and to be tinkering in the hood, when Martha tripped down the steps of her home. But he was doomed to disappointment again.

On the Third Trip Around the Block.

"Thank you, Dale, but I can't. This is a holiday as far as business is concerned, but not in regard to politics. I've some lists to go over at the office, in the interest of Mrs. Slocum's candidacy; and what more fitting than the transaction of such matters on the anniversary of the woman who took the step that won us the vote? But I'll be glad to ride to my office with you, if you care to take me."

It was an ultimatum, and he could do nothing but yield to its terms.

"I'll propose in a jiffy, even if it is only a three-minute ride," he told himself desperately.

But the chance didn't offer, because traffic was heavy, and he was obliged to attend strictly to the business of driving.

Other business offices paid no heed to Susan B. Anthony's birthday and cars lined the streets at every available parking place, and moving vehicles progressed in steady streams along the streets. There was an open space in front of the building where Martha's office was located, and Dale was about to drive into it when his eye caught the police sign:

"No Parking Here."

Dale swung back into the stream of cars and continued down the street.

"I'll have to park somewhere else nearby," he told Martha, and turned the next corner. There were two vacant spaces in the block, one on each side, but those formidable signs loomed up and warned drivers away.

"Can't find a place," Dale remarked.

"So I see," said Martha. "Why not drive around the block? Maybe some parked car will leave in the meantime."

But the situation was no more favorable as Dale and Martha again approached the latter's office.

"I'll stop here and take a chance," he said, heading for the "no parking" space.

"Better not," she warned. "There's a policeman there watching. Drive round the block again."

By this time Dale had come to the conclusion that the fates were with him. He decided it was his chance to pop the question which he had held back so long.

"Martha," he said, keeping his eye on his course through the crowded street, "I've been wanting for a long time to say something to you. You must have sensed how I felt—"

"Look out," she warned. "See that big machine—"

"Missed, but pretty close," he observed, then resumed:

"You must have sensed how I felt, because I couldn't hide it. How I have longed for an opportunity to have you—"

"You'll run over that old man!" she cried. "No, he's dodged back."

"How I have longed for the opportunity to have you alone just once," he resumed, turning a corner. "No place here to park; guess I'll have to keep going."

"You might let me out on the next corner," she suggested. "No, that won't do either. The policeman wouldn't stand for it with this heavy traffic."

"I have felt," Dale declared, "that I must find some way to speak to you; but you've been so busy with business and politics that I've never had the—Gee! that was a close shave. I almost forgot the semaphore, and it's red. There, the way's clear. Nope, every place is taken except that one, and it says 'no parking.' Martha, you could make me—"

Dale stopped talking right then, for he got caught in a maelstrom of automobiles and it required concentration to work his way out.

Starting on the third trip around the block Dale resumed:

"Martha, you could make me the happiest man in—Good night! The motor's stopped."

"What's the matter?" she inquired as he headed the car, under its momentum, for a space which was marked "No Parking Here."

"Out of gas, I guess," he returned, as the inside front wheel struck the curb. "I intended getting some and forgot it. Well, the cops can't kick when I explain what's the trouble."

"I'm still a whole block from the office," she observed, but she still was smiling.

"I'll finish what I was saying—if I go to jail for it," Dale declared. "Martha, what I've been trying to say is that I love you and want you to marry me. Will you?"

A policeman could be seen approaching, his eye on the couple who sat in the car that was parked where "no parking" was permitted.

"Dale," said Martha, placing a small gloved hand over one of his, "I like your business methods. I'm a business woman and can appreciate them. It's true we haven't had much time together lately, and I've wished we might. You ask me in a very business-like manner to marry you, and I'll answer the same way, 'Yes.' Now, I'll have to get out and leave you and walk to the office. I'll wait and help you explain to the policeman if you wish. And the election will soon be over, Dale, and then we'll have more time."

"Never mind the policeman," he returned, a happy light shining in his eyes. "I guess I won't get pinched."

As a matter of fact, he didn't care much whether he was or not.

SUNFLOWERS AS BEAN POLES

Gardeners Have Ingenious Method of Decreasing the Cost of Raising Popular Vegetable.

The high cost of wood has at last affected even the humble bean pole. While the cost of bean poles may seem to be a mere trifle, one has but to consider the scores used in large fields and note the price of even soft woods to see that the total can be a great item in overhead. To beat this gardeners have tried out with success the giant Russian sunflower. They planted two or three seeds with each hill of climbing beans, and thinned to leave one sunflower plant to each hill.

Up this live "pole" the beans twined and ascended. The gardener kept all leaves off the sunflower except several at the very top. They made excellent poles, yielded a crop of their own, and were cheap. Low cost and the convenience with which they are provided, are big advantages of the sunflower bean pole.

Of course, the sunflower isn't the first makeshift bean pole. Throughout those farming regions of America where wood is scarce, climbing beans for decades have been planted almost wholly in the corn. There are western farmers who don't know what you mean when you speak of "pole" beans. They call them "cornstalk" beans, because of the universal use of the makeshift pole.

First Porcelain Money.

The Oriental use of porcelain for coinage began with Siamese porcelain tokens in use from the middle of the Eighteenth century until 1871, when they were forbidden. The majority of these pieces were issued in Bangkok, largely by gambling houses. There are at least 890 known kinds. They occur in a great variety of shapes, colors and values. The denominations are on the reverse, and are generally in blue. The native name of this currency is "Pi." The inscriptions are usually in Chinese, as the gambling houses were usually owned and operated by Chinese.

When the household cares and the worries of everyday life have dragged you down, made you unhappy, and there is nothing in life but headache, backache and worry, turn to the right prescription, one gotten up by Dr. Pierce fifty years ago, which has helped many thousands of women in this country. It is called Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and can be had in every drug store in the land, in tablet or liquid form.

Auburn, N. Y.:—"A couple of years ago I suffered a severe nervous break-down. I could not sleep and became so weak and shaky that I could scarcely walk. I can't begin to tell how miserable I was. I was advised to take Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it completely restored me to health and cured me of my nervous condition. I can highly recommend 'Favorite Prescription' to women who suffer with nervousness of any sort."—MRS. CATHERINE WRIGHT, 122 Osborne St.

MANY OF McGRAW'S LIEUTENANTS HAVE MADE GOOD TEAM LEADERS

Hughie Jennings, recently appointed coach of the Giants is the latest of a distinguished line of lieutenants engaged by John McGraw in recent years. First of these was Wilbert Robinson, who, when he assumed the management of the Brooklyn team, was succeeded by Charles Dooin, at present proprietor of a garage in Philadelphia. George Gibson replaced Dooin, and Pat Moran was engaged to take Gibby's place when George branched out as a manager. Moran was released from his contract with the Giants in order that he might accept the management of the Reds, and Christy Mathewson, who had just returned from France, was signed in his stead. Johnny Evers joined the team last May and became McGraw's chief aid when Matty's health failed, necessitating his retirement.

Improved Gunnery in the Navy.

Analysis of the gunnery exercises of the American navy during the past year shows that the greatest progress toward efficiency was made by vessels of the battleship class, due to the large number of men aboard such ships and the comparative stability of the personnel. The navy department considers that battleship gunnery is at present about equal to that of foreign battleships. It is believed that next year vessels of other classes will be brought up as regards gunnery to the level of our battleships.—Scientific American.

WHY PAPER IS HIGH

Every week the stock brokerage firm of E. M. Fuller & Co. of New York issue a current market review, which tells why industrials, motors, oils etc., are good investments. The Gazette has no desire to advertise the company or to sell stock in the International Paper Co., but newspapers are dependant upon said paper company, and the review shows why paper stock is unreasonable high. It has been claimed that there is a shortage of wood pulp, but this report says the company has vast forests in Canada, which appear to be inexhaustible for generations to come.

The review is printed in full, that Gazette readers may see for themselves why paper is high.

"The International Paper Company commenced its era of great prosperity in 1916, and by eliminating a substantial volume of its bonded debt since that time, and conserving its surplus, the company placed itself in a strong position to face any possible depression.

"Not only was International Paper's bonded indebtedness redeemed in 1917, but the company also cleaned up the 33½ percent dividends which had accumlated on the preferred stock, so that that issue is now free, paving the way for dividends on the common stock when conditions justify disbursements on the junior issue.

"As of December 31, 1919, the company had current assets amounting to $31,749,715, representing an increase of $16,338,240, or 108 percent over current assets of $15,490,531 at the close of 1914. Net working capital af $21,239,531 at the close of 1914. Net working capital of $21,239,527 on December 31 showed an increase of $11,303,922, or 141 percent over net working capital of $8,935,605 on December 31, 1914.

"During the five years ended December 31, 1919, International Paper's net earnings amounted to $87.39 a share on the outstanding common stock, after preferred dividends, and inasmuch as no dividends have as yet been paid on the common stock, this amount has been paid on the common stock, this amount has been added to its value in that period.

"In the ten and one-half years from July 1, 1909, to December 31, 1919, the total net earnings of the company to $30,359,656, equal to $87.34 a share on the outstanding common stock, after full payment of 6 percent dividends on the preferred, and the annual average net earnings during this period amounted to $2,891,396, equal to $8.31 a share on the common stock, after payment of preferred dividends.

"While International Paper owes a large part of its present prosperous financial status to war conditions, it now faces a much more favorable outlook than existed five years ago. The company is extending its operations in Canada, where the vast forests appear to be inexhaustible for generations to come. The farsighted policy of its directors in conserving cash despite criticism and oft-repeated suggestions that some payment should be made on the common stock, has placed the company in a cash position that is bound to reflect to the greater benfit of stockholders ultimately

"While it is impossible to secure an estimate of the company's possible earnings for 1920, it is said that net profits for the year will be surprising, and in consideration of this expectation, and the fact that the company is in the strongest financial position in its history, the common stock is looked upon as a remarkable speculation."

"Prevailing price $44.
1920 high $91¾."

—The newspaper publishers who don't dare to raise prices to meet present conditions will also be afraid to ask what their plants are worth when they have to sell them for junk.—Gilmer (Tex.) Mirror.

—Our idea of no place to go is the "grand opening of a funeral home."—Medicine Lodge (Kan.) Index.

The books of few authors ever achieve a sale of 1,000,000 copies. Fewer still are the authors who live to see such popularity. Yet this talented daughter of the Empire state has lived to see it and the end is not yet, for she continues to write and sales show no diminishment. It all started with "Tess of the Storm Country." That story made the fortune of a magazine for women which ran it serially. Moving picture producers and players have also gained fame and fortune through it. A later romance, "The Shadow of the Sheltering Pines," has another sweet, charming, pathetic little heroine very much like "Tess." We propose that our readers shall become acquainted with her and shall reproduce the story serially. Keep your eyes open for the first installment.

Tuesday, Feb. 1, the Date for Hearing on Weymouth Limited Town Meeting Act

Weymouth Gazette AND TRANSCRIPT

OVER 12,000 READERS

WHOLE NUMBER 2826 — FIFTY-FIFTH YEAR

VOL. LV NO. 3 — WEYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS, FRIDAY, JANUARY 21, 1921 — PRICE SIX CENTS

Over $6,000 Raised For Tornado Relief

The sum of $6,105.66 was raised by the Tornado Relief Committee of Weymouth, and distributed among 14 parties who sustained damage by the disastrous tornado which visited South Weymouth on the afternoon of Tuesday, Aug. 31, 1920.

This, in brief, was the report of the committee of the town made last Friday evening at a public meeting called by the Selectmen at the Engine house in Ward Five.

The Committee on Tornado Relief appointed by the Selectmen included: William J. Holbrook, chairman; Prince H. Tirrell, secretary; James W. Santry, treasurer; George L. Wentworth, Matthew O'Dowd, Kenneth Nash, George Marshall, D. Frank Daly, Emerson R. Dizer, John Reardon, J. Leonard Bicknell, John Reidy, John Tower, Edward W. Hunt and Fred A. Alden.

The committee at the outset thought $10,000 was necessary to meet the needs, but were encouraged when over $6000 was raised, and return thanks to the public generally and to the ladies, the Field Day Committee and others for work which made so large a sum possible. The committee wish the total had been larger, but $6,105.66 doubtless came in handy to those who suffered loss.

The meeting voted to forward the report to the Selectmen with a request that there be no publication.

SUPPER OF MEN'S CLUB

At the Union Congregational church of Weymouth and Braintree the monthly supper of the Men's Club brought out the usual number of members and guests. Clarence Temple had the supper in charge and everyone declared it a fine repast.

The speaker of the evening was Elmer Abercrombie of Braintree, who told of his trip abroad, taking in the battlefields and much of the devastated country in France and Belgium. As this was the nineteenth time Mr. Abercrombie has crossed the Atlantic and visited various parts of Europe, he had many things to tell, inasmuch as by his experience of former trips he knew just how to cover the territory and get the very most out of it.

Although it was most interesting to hear his impressions of the different places that figured so strongly as battle places of the late great World War, there were many other things he told that could not be gleaned from books or newspapers. He saw one of the wonderful "Big Guns" that threw shells so many, many miles and which the people of that locality have fenced in and charge an admittance to see. He also went into the Cathedral at Antwerp where is located the largest organ in the world and heard it played. At Geneva he visited the "House of a Thousand mirrors" and jokingly said, "You can imagine that I thought I was surrounded by an army of giants when I beheld myself reflected so many times.

He said it was very affecting to visit the cemeteries near the battle front, where lie the honored dead, 2600 white crosses in one, and all of the same type and where no one is allowed to erect any other monument, inasmuch as the Supreme Sacrifice made all, officers and privates, equal.

And so he went on recalling place after place that our war news made familiar to all, but giving a little bit of information that would fix it forever in the listener's mind. So the evening was very entertaining and a most profitable one for all that attended.

RESCUED FROM DROWING

Only a timely rescue and the effective work of Dr. J. H. Libby saved William Haszbecker of East Weymouth from drowning at Whitman's pond yesterday. The lad of 14 years started to cross on the ice, but broke through. His shouts for help attracted a number of persons, and they threw a rope to him, but he was unable to grasp it. James McKerlie crawled out on the ice, and suceeded in pulling the boy out of the water. He was unconscious at the time, but Dr. Libby was quickly reached, and he worked over him and finally resuscitated him when he was taken home. He is the son of James Haszbecker of Pine Ridge road, who figured in an automobile accident in Dorchester early in the week.

MEETING OF SELECTMEN

The Selectmen were busy at their meeting this week drawing up the warrant for the Annual Town meeting of March 7 which will be held in the Opera House at East Weymouth. It was voted to keep the polls open at the election March 14 from 5.45 A. M. to 4 P. M.

Permission was given to hold moving pictures shows in the Community Building at Lovell's Corner.

John L. Maynard was appointed special police.

Minor licenses were granted.

Save-A-Life Certificates Keep Europe's Children From Starving

This card certifies that the holder has given $10 to feed a hungry waif until the next harvest.

Across the seas in the countries of Eastern and Central Europe, 3,500,000 children are looking to America to keep them alive until the next harvest. There is no food to be had except that shipped to them by the European Relief Council of which Herbert Hoover is the chairman.

In order to guarantee these little lives against starvation and disease, Mr. Hoover has asked the public to buy "Save-a-Life Certificates," costing $10 each, or as much as the purchaser would like to give. That small sum will ward off famine until this year's crops have been garnered and distributed, and economic conditions are again normal in Poland, Esthonia, Lithuania, Czecho-Slovakia and Austria.

Save-A-Life Certificates are now being distributed throughout New England by the Junior Red Cross, one of the eight relief organizations pledged to help Mr. Hoover raise $33,000,000 to provide food and medical attention for the little sufferers made destitute by the war.

Everybody is urged to help for the need is immediate and compelling. Sunday School classes are requested to pool their pennies and buy a child's life by giving $10 for a certificate. Autoists are asked to give the cost of a few gallons of gasolene or oil to save a baby from rickets. Mr. Hoover has appealed to every family in the United States to entertain one of these hungry boys or girls as an "invisible guest" until the next harvest.

New School Lots Wanted At North Weymouth

The Annual Town Meeting will be held this year in the Odd Fellows Opera House at East Weymouth. This was decided at the meeting of the Selectmen this week when action was taken on issuing the warrant. Usually at the annual meeting this hall has not been large enough to accommodate all the men voters, but now there are about as many more women voters. The meeting will be called at 7.30 P. M.

The annual town election will come a week later, with polling places as usual in the different precincts of the town. The polls will be open from 5.45 A. M. to 4 P. M., the time has been extended in the afternoon.

Among the articles to be considered March 7, are two relative to additional school lots at North Weymouth.

One of the articles is to see if the town will appropriate money for the purchase of a lot at North Weymouth. Another article calls for the purchase of one or both of the George A. Walker and the E. Russell Bailey lots on Bridge street, and appropriate money therefor.

Another article is on petition, and calls for holding the annual town meetings the first Monday in December, which is about the time the city elections are held.

Forestalling the action of the Legislature, there is an article, "To see what action the town will take on the following question:—Shall an Act passed by the General Court in the year 1921, entitled 'an Act to provide for limited town meetings, town meeting members, a referendum and an annual moderator in the town of Weymouth'—be accepted by this town?

Other articles call for $800 for Parks, $1000 for a convenience station at Webb Park, $1000 for remodelling hose wagon for Combination 4, $2000 for district nurse, $2500 for permanent sidewalks, the purchase of lot on Whitman street adjoining the James Humphrey school, $300 for Filomena street, $2000 for removal of street railway tracks on Pond and Pleasant streets, $900 for sidewalk on Main street near the Nevin school, $300 for sidewalk on Lovell street, $5000 for publication of town history, water and lighting on Forrest street, and street lights on various streets.

TOWN MEETING ACT

By mail this morning the Gazette received a printed copy of the proposed Act granting Weymouth limited town meetings. Representative Tirrell informs the Gazette that the Legislative Committee will give a public hearing on this petition at the State House on Tuesday, Feb. 1.

In the next issue of the Gazette the Act will be reviewed at length, and possibly printed in full. Voters will be interested to learn how the town is divided into precincts; how many town meeting members are to be elected from each precinct, how town meetings are to be advertised; whether the referendum will cover all appropriations voted; how many days will be allowed in which to petition for a referendum; whether there is any provision for publicity on votes taken by town meeting members; whether all records will be open to the public; what provisions are made for acceptance of Act; also the earliest date it can go into effect. NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS Organized Fight of Capital on the Closed Shop Becomes More Imminent.

ACTION BY MANUFACTURERS

Machinists Accuse the Railroad Companies—Plan to Stop Immigration Probably Killed — Harding Inauguration to Be Simple—Affairs in Europe.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

American industries and American business generally are beginning to "speed up" and the more optimistic, like Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of the United States Steel corporation, declares there is nothing unfavorable to prosperity on the horizon. Prices of many commodities, including some lines of building materials, are coming down steadily, and in many cases wages are being reduced, in some instances the reduction being made by the employers and accepted by the men and in others being suggested by the workers themselves in order that the plants may be enabled to continue in operation.

All this is quite satisfactory to the ordinary citizen, but there is one dark cloud, despite the assertions of the optimists. This is the coming fight between organized labor and capital over the open shop. There are many signs that the issue will be joined soon. Last Wednesday the representatives of twenty-two state manufacturers' associations, in conference in Chicago, adopted resolutions pledging support for the open shop movement. In the discussion many speakers declared they would not employ union labor in their factories and mills, but when the vote was taken it was made clear that the resolution did not propose any discrimination against the holder of a union card. In substance the resolution was:

"It is recognized as fundamental in this country that all law-abiding citizens or residents have the right to work when they please, for whom they please, and on whatever terms are mutually agreed upon between employee and employer and without interference or discrimination upon the part of others.

"We hereby express our purpose to support these fundamental principles of American plan of employment by the maintenance of the open shop.

"We urge upon our members to secure by discussion and education the active support of workers, merchants, bankers and professional men and all other elements of their prospective communities in favor of American ideals and the open shop."

Only a few days previously an attorney for the International Association of Machinists presented to the interstate commerce commission a petition charging that the larger railroad companies have united in an open shop movement designed to disrupt unionism, and that they are this year "milking the United States treasury to the tune of $750,000,000 through their car repair manipulation." The companies, it is asserted, are closing their repair shops and giving the work to outside concerns which charge exorbitant rates, and in this way more than 80,000 workers have been thrown out of employment. According to the machinists, this drive on railroad shop workers is only one phase of a capitalistic "open shop" movement developing throughout the country, which has for "its real object" disruption of "all legitimate labor organizations and trade union agreements."

Closely connected with the question of labor is that of immigration and its restriction. The forces of organized labor have been in favor of the Johnson bill, which would stop all immigration for one year, and so have many other elements of the population, but late dispatches from Washington indicate that the bill is to be sidetracked by the senate committee and nothing done until the senators can formulate a permanent policy on immigration. In this they are yielding to the opinion of representatives of certain classes of employers, including the railroad, steel and coal people, who told the committee that the threatened "flood if immigrants from Europe" is a myth, and that there is no emergency warranting the passage of the Johnson measure.

Secretary Frank Morrison of the American Federation of Labor told the committee that the federation's demand was for straight-out protection from alien labor for a period of two years. He said that reports just received from labor officials in 141 cities showed the total number of unemployed in these places to be 1,819,372, and said he would not "dare estimate what the total of all cities would show."

Figures were submitted by Mr. Morrison showing the unemployed in Greater New York to be 300,000; Detroit, 150,000; Philadelphia, 235,000; Chicago, 200,000; Cleveland, 118,000; St. Louis, 40,000; Boston, 50,000; Milwaukee, 40,000; San Francisco, 15,000; Seattle, 9,000, and Pittsburgh, 20,000. In contrast to this, he showed, the net immigration, at present rates, would be 784,000 a year.

Avowedly in order to set an example of economy and democratic simplicity, Mr. Harding last week caused to be canceled all the arrangements for an elaborate ceremony on the occasion of his inauguration March 4. At his request the citizens' committee called off the celebration it had planned and also the ball, and the joint congressional committee agreed that there shall be nothing doing except the administration of the oath to the President-elect and the delivery of his address, probably from the east porch of the capitol. This course naturally has peeved the business men and hotel keepers of Washington, but everyone else in the country heartily commends it.

Mr. Harding's conferences with prominent men are about over. Very soon he will leave Marion for Florida, where he will write his inaugural and presumably finish making up his mind as to his cabinet. Concerning the latter, it was interesting if not pleasant to read last week that the hyphenated German-Americans, newly organized into a league, were virtually to ask Mr. Harding to give a place in the cabinet to a German-American. A committee was selected to carry to Marion a list of men from which the President-elect might make a choice. The avowed desire of the new league to create an era of good feeling at home and abroad would meet with greater sympathy if it did not insist on the "German," and if it were not for the fact that one of its leaders is George Sylvester Viereck, editor of a magazine that was formerly the Fatherland and notorious for his pro-German activities during the war.

General Crowder is helping Cuba to get out of her political and financial tangle and the prospect is now that he will succeed. First he has taken up the matter of the recent presidential elections, recommending that the thousands of charges of fraud be cleared up speedily by grouping them and deciding representative cases. Then he will undertake to arrange the island's money troubles. The Cuban senate already has passed a measure for the extension of the moratorium for four months on a modified basis, a plan approved by President Menocal and probably by General Crowder. The Cubans are strongly opposed to the plan of the American bankers for taking over their financial institutions, which were collapsing. They said the bankers asked too high a rate of interest and too long a period for the loan offered. It is said the situation is unpleasantly complicated by the activity of our acting secretary of state, Norman H. Davis, who is reputed to have made a fortune in Havana under the regime of Gomez, one of the claimants to the presidency.

Discord between the British and French over the question of German reparations is further revealed by the downfall of the Leygues ministry in Paris. A large majority of the chamber of deputies fell in with the popular belief that Premier Leygues and his colleagues were too much under the influence of the British cabinet, which wishes that a reparations total be named far below what the French people have been led to expect. Because Leygues refused to outline his foreign policy before the meeting with Lloyd George, which was set for this week, the chamber declined to give him a vote of confidence and he and his fellows resigned. It was said in Paris the adverse vote was due partly to the action of the American government in withdrawing from the council of ambassadors, many deputies regarding this as showing America's lack of confidence in the French government.

Tchitcherin, foreign minister of soviet Russia, has defied the League of Nations to send an international army to the plebiscite region of Lithuania, and in a note to the Polish government has warned the allies that the soviet armies will attack any such force. He asserts the Vilna affair is not of concern to Poland and Lithuania alone, but that Russia also is vitally interested.

The Germans are tremendously excited concerning another proposed plebiscite, that in the coal region of Silesia, for they have convinced themselves that Poland is planning to seize that territory before the vote is held. It is said in Berlin that an army of 175,000 Poles has been concentrated near the Silesian border and at Posen for this purpose. The Poles certainly are getting ready for action, and are reorganizing their armies along French lines, but ostensibly they are preparing to meet the expected offensive of the Reds.

Mustapha Kemal Pasha has administered a severe blow to the Greeks in Asia Minor. Concentrating heavy forces secretly, he made a surprise attack on the Smyrna front, breaking through the Greek lines in three places and so threatening an encirclement that the Greeks were forced to retire toward the coast. The Turks captured several towns as well as many prisoners, and it looks as if they might bottle the Greeks up in Smyrna.

King Constantine thinks the French are carrying on a campaign to force the revision of the treaty of Sevres and to compel the Greeks to get out of the Smyrna region—and it is likely he is correct in his belief. He announced last week that he would not abdicate even if the allied nations should refuse to recognize him as the ruler of Greece.

Austria's distressful condition is growing worse daily, if that is possible. A few days ago it was reported that the government had notified the allied nations that it was ready to quit and turn over the country to the League of Nations to manage. The economic and political situation there seems hopeless. Nearly everyone has quit work, and a general strike has been ordered to begin Thursday of this week. Workmen declare they will remain idle until profiteering ceases, and demand that the deduction of the income tax from their pay envelopes stop until the capital levy law is put in force. The government has made drastic regulations against profiteering, but these often are disregarded and extortionate prices are asked for all commodities not under government control. The communists, of course, are ready to take advantage of the situation and start more trouble.

The treaty of Chicago, the pact which brings peace to the warring factions in baseball, was adopted and signed last week, and Judge Landis is now the supreme ruler of the national game. The magnates of the various leagues agreed to give him full power when they incorporated in the document a clause reading thus:

"In case conduct detrimental to baseball is charged, alleged or suspected, the commissioner (Landis) shall have jurisdiction to investigate and determine the facts; upon such determination he may take such preventive, remedial or punitive action as he deems appropriate, against any party hereto, any minor league club connected with the National association, or any individual, as the case may be."

Biblical Information.

The Lookout prints the following information about the Bible: "The Bible contains 3,566,480 letters, 810,697 words, 31,175 verses, 1,189 chapters, 66 books. The longest chapter is Psalm 119, and the shortest is Psalm 117. This is also the middle chapter. The middle verse, however, is Psalm 118:8. The longest name is in Isaiah chapter 8."

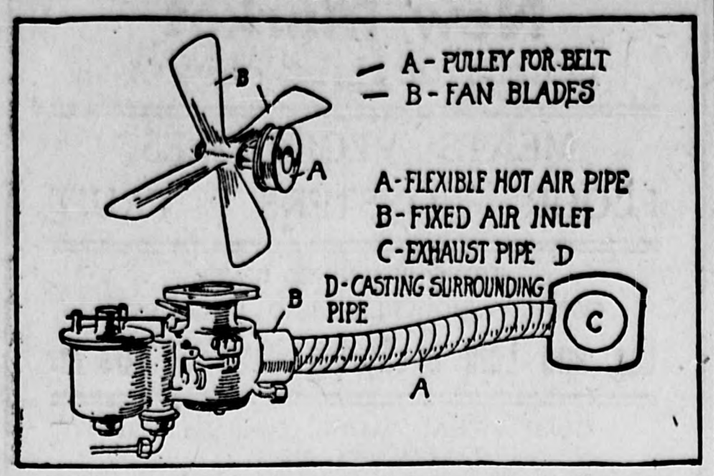

Why He Stopped Singing.

George was improvising both words and music of the songs he was singing. His mother, being highly entertained by his efforts, kept urging him to sing more of his songs. At last he refused to sing another word. "Why won't you sing any more?" his mother asked. She was somewhat startled when he replied: "Can't, mother. Daddy and I's joined the union."

Almost Paradise on Earth.

In the fortunate Bermudas there are no reptiles to alarm; the indigenous small lizard is not even dangerous in appearance, and the green turtle is translatable into delicious soup. Of birds and fish the islands have a splendid store; Bermudians would not starve to death even should the importation of meat from this country cease.

SOME HEAT IS ESSENTIAL FOR CARBURETOR IN COLD WEATHER

Arrangement of Tube Leading From Exhaust Pipe to Carburetor.

Whether you have a starter or not, a motor that is difficult to get under way is an exasperating proposition—and the arrival of cooler days and the present low grade of gasoline will make any motor difficult of initial operation. It is the absence of heat that brings about the hard starting motor, due to the difficulty of volatilizing the low grade of gasoline now on the market.

Truth is the fuel is so cold and heavy it will not break up and mix with air even if the suction of the motor raises a sufficient quantity for ordinary purposes. Most of the cars now built are fitted with hot air tubes leading from the exhaust pipe to the fixed air inlet of the carburetor, thus permitting only hot air to enter, which aids in gasfying the gasoline.

This hot air tube will be of no particular avail while the engine is dead cold, as, for instance, when it has been standing all night, but is of material advantage in economical running and in starting. The common practice is to have a hollow casting clamped to the exhaust pipe and from the interior of this is run a flexible metal pipe to the fixed air intake of the carburetor, thus supplying warm air at all times and aiding in making better mixture and more economy in the matter of fuel consumption.

Heat Generates Gas.

The warmer the air the more a given quantity of gasoline is transferred into gas, and so more economy is insured. Besides, it has been found that in even cool weather it is almost impossible to so adjust a carburetor as to permit the motor to be throttled down as well as it should be, and again the hot air pipe comes into good use.

Most of the carburetor manufacturers or agents have these pipes ready for instant installation, and as they cost little, no motorist should be without one. As a matter of fact, a large section hose can be used so long as some arrangement is made whereby it can be secured at the exhaust pipe end.

A tin can could be slipped over the exhaust pipe and the hose inserted in a hole in the can. This would serve the purpose just as well as the flexible pipe, except it would be difficult to keep in place and would tend to rattle.

Fans Cause Trouble.

Efficient cooling of a motor depends somewhat upon the condition of the fan, or more particularly, the fan blades. An instance is known where a motorist had gone over his car and even had a repairman investigate to find out why the motor heated. It was found that three out of the four fan blades had in some manner become straightened out, so as to pull no air through the radiator, although the fan was being driven by the belt as it was designed to do. As soon as the blades were turned to their original position and air was pulled through the radiator there was no trouble about keeping the motor cool.

Clean the Fuel Tank.

Don't overlook the gasoline tank in the matter of cleaning, for at some time it will be found this is a necessary thing. Here was a recent cause that baffled even the experts, and it all came about because the owner ran out of gasoline. That was not a great misfortune, for he happened to be near a supply station and the tank was refilled. But the motor would not start, although a few moments before it had been running. Gasoline would not flow to the carburetor, although the tank had just been filled.

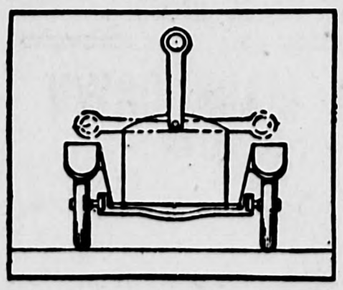

When the gasoline ran out, became entirely exhausted, even down to the last drop, it carried into the gasoline feed pipe some little particle of refuse or dirt that previously had been floating on the top of the gasoline. This found its way into the pipe and clogged it, so as to prevent a flow to the carburetor. The remedy was simple enough when the difficulty was discovered. The gasoline pipe was removed and the particle of dirt blown out. It is because of this that it is essential that the tank be cleaned out every once in a while.

INDICATOR GIVES DIRECTION

Convenient Means Provided for Facilitating Passage of Car Through Congested City.

The Scientific American in illustrating and describing a direction indicator, the invention of J. E. Mayhall of Covington, Ky., says:

The primary object of the invention is to provide a convenient means for facilitating driving a vehicle, preferably a motor vehicle in a congested city or in fact anywhere it is desirable to give a warning to a vehicle either approaching from the front or rear, the direction which the vehicle on which the indicator is installed is to take, the device being conveniently operated by the chauffeur.

PLAN FOR REPLACING BOLTS

Often Very Difficult to Get Those Running Through Frame Channel Back in Place.

Bolts running through the frame channel are often very difficult to get in place once they are removed. An easy method where these bolts are drilled is to take a cotter pin and run a piece of wire through the hole in the bolt. The bolt may then be drawn through the hole.

TROUBLE IN IGNITION COILS

Effort to Secure Greater Efficiency Is Likely to Burn Out the Condenser.

The ignition coils on the market are made for the voltage that is obtained by using five or six dry cells. To connect a greater number of coils in series in order to secure greater efficiency is very likely to burn out the condenser and ruin the coil.

WEAK VALVE SPRINGS

Weakening of the springs which close the valves is a common cause of faulty engine operation. Whenever the valves are taken out the springs should be examined to see that they are all of the same length, or rather that all of the inlet set are of the same length and all of the exhaust, as the exhaust springs will probably be a little longer than the others. If one spring is shorter than the others in its set it should be stretched or else a metal plate must be put under it to bring tension up to equality with its fellows.

Daylight saving time schedules were condemned by Frank E. Blakeman of Stratford, State master of the Connecticut Grange, which held its annual session there. He claimed daylight saving, so called, adds materially to the cost of producing agricultural food products. He also said Connecticut should adopt laws to carry out enforcement of the Volstead act.

Work preliminary to building the schooner Mayflower, financed by Bostonians as defender of the Esperanto cup, won in the international fishing vessel contest off Halifax, N. S., last fall, started this week in East Boston. Two firms have volunteered to donate their products in connection with the enterprise—Roebling & Sons of Trenton, N. J., and Glidden & Co. of Boston.

Efforts to raise in Massachusetts a larger proporion of the food needed by the people and of the feed necessary to sustain its farm animals were urged by Vice President-elect Calvin Coolidge in an address at the annual dinner of the Franklin County Agricultural Society in Greenfield. "We need," he said, "to make our own State the producer of more raw materials and to bring back to Massachusetts farming back to its former prodctiveness."

He Passed.

"At one of our examinations," says a member of the faculty of a western university, "a nervous student had been instructed to write out examples of the indicative, subjunctive, potential and exclamatory moods. His efforts resulted as follows: 'I am endeavoring to pass an English examination. If I answer 20 questions, I shall pass. If I answer 12, I may pass. God help me!'"—Harper's Magazine.

Leather-Stocking.

Leather-Stocking is the nickname of Natty Bumppo, one of the favorite characters drawn by the American writer of Indian and sea tales, James Fenimore Cooper. The bearer of the nickname is a half-savage, half-Christian chevalier of American wild life of almost a century and a quarter ago. Leather-Stocking reappears and closes his career in Cooper's story, "The Prairie."

BOSTON PRODUCE MARKET FOR WEEK OF JANUARY 10-15, 1921 FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

There were liberal supplies of the principal fruits and vegetables on the market and many important lines showed a downward price trend. Apples were fairly steady, No. 1 Maine Baldwins selling $4.25-4.50 per barrel, and good New Hampshire Baldwins at $4.75-5.50. Cabbage was plentiful and lower; Maine and New York state Danish lost 25c-50c closing at $1.00-1.25 per barrel. Cape Cod cranberries were in light supply and higher at $14.00-1800 per barrel. Florida lettuce in half barrel hampers declined from $2.50-3.00 on Monday to $1.75-2.25 by the end of the week. Connecticut Valley onions were plentiful and sold slowly at $1.25-1.50 per 100 pounds. Maine potatoes opened at $1.85-2.00 but declined to $1.75-1.90 by the end of the week. Green Hubbard squash was in good demand at $110.00-120.00 per ton bulk. Texas spinach advanced from $1.00-1.25 per bushel basket to $1.50 at the end of the week. Delaware and New Jersey sweet potatoes were in light supply and held firm at $1.75 per bushel. Native grown root vegetables were steady at the following prices per bushel: beets $1.50-2.00, carrots and parsnips $1.50-1.75, turnips 75c-1.00. Hothouse cucumbers and tomatoes were scarce and high, cucumbers selling $15.00-30.00 per bushel box, and tomatoes 50c-60c per pound. A few refrigerators of Florida strawberries were received and sold at 50c-60c per quart.

Dairy Markets.

Practically all the dairy markets have advanced with the exception of butter. The expected arrival in this country of over two million pounds from Denmark had made the market nervous, and caused a decline of 2 to 3c at the close of the week. Consumption has been good and the local market has had very little fancy butter, but dealers are uncertain as to the effect of the heavy imports. Top grades of fresh closed at 52c and storage at 50c. Low grades and Dairy butter weak.

After the radical advance of 1-2c at country cheese markets Monday, the markets gained strength, but dealers did not follow the advance well and at the close there was some nervousness evident. White Twins, fancy held, sold at 28c, Young Americas at 29c, and late made twins brought 25½c.

Eggs have not arrived as freely as expected and the low prices of the past week have evidently increased consumption beyond the supply. Storage eggs were practically off the market so far as wholesale trade was concerned, so prices have made several sharp advances. Fresh westerns sold from 68c to 71c on Monday, and at the close had advanced to 74-77c. Hennery eggs went from 72c up to 78c.

Poultry has likewise advanced, most all styles showing 2 to 3c higher at the close. Large birds have sold best, large fowl going from 38 to 40c up to 42c wholesale, while the fine chickens moved from 44c up to 46c and 48c. Broilers have sold up to 49c. Turkeys have been very short and are reaching the luxury class with the few boxes here selling at 58c to 62c. Geese and Ducks also scarce and prices nominal. Live poultry from nearby points has not been plentiful and the approaching egg laying period has evidently kept the fowl on the farm. Large birds have ranged 2 to 3c higher up to 40c and chickens according to size up to 38c.

Residents of Methuen, Mass., are in grave doubt as to the outcome of a "special town meeting" which will be held soon to decide the form of government desired. The doubt is caused by the women's vote, which was of no concern in 1917, when the decision for a city form of government was supposed to have been taken. Another factor is the vote of scores of former Lawrence citizens who have taken residence here lately.

Heads of two state departments have lost little time in putting into practice certain recommendations made by Gov. Cox of Massachusetts, in his inaugural address, which make for economy and business efficiency. Tax Commissioner Henry F. Long announced that the income tax department will begin promptly depositing all funds it receives with the state treasurer. The income tax department handles $16,000,000 annuallly.

To rid the building of rats it is necessary to stop their food supply, deprive them of their shelter and then either trap them, poison them or drive them away with cats or dogs. This, in brief, is the advice the Boston health department gives in a circular it is now distributing. "You will not have rats unless you feed them or provide them with shelter, or do both," states the circular. "If rats already infest your premises you will not get rid of them until you have deprived them of food and of shelter or of both."

Governor Cox, guest of honor at a reception and banquet of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company at the City Club, Boston, declared that if people will get away from the "appeal to fear and despair" better conditions will be seen in Massachusetts and the United States. The governor further urged his auditiors to have care "lest the traditions of law and order, the right to individual liberty and to enjoy the products of your own thrift, fail to be protected." He asked for a return to the example set by the Pilgrims and the manner in which they solved their problems 300 years ago.

That a pay-as-you-go plan be adopted for meeting the required pension expenditures which must be made from the public treasury, in place of the present plan by which the burden ployees be placed upon a contributory is shifted upon a future generation; that pensions of all future public embasis similar to the State and teachers' systems now in existence; that the many glaring inequalities in existing laws be removed, and that no further laws for special pensions, annuities or gratuities be enacted, are among the recommendations of the Joint Special Committee on Pensions, filed with the clerk of the Massachusetts House.

QUINCY THEATRE

The Quincy Theatre announces two big attractions by the Al Luttringer Stock Co., Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday: "St. Elmo" Thursday, Friday and Saturday: "Why Girls Leave Home."

"St. Elmo" is a new dramatization from Augusta J. Evans famous novel, and has for generations been one of the most widely read of American novels.

The story concerns St. Elmo Murray, a young impetuous, Southern aristocrat, who at the opening of the play has found his friend and his fiancee both faithless. He kills the friend in a duel and is forced to flee the country. The duel has been witnessed by a young mountain girl, Edna Earle, who, even though filled with horror at the murder, aids him to escape by telling a deliberate lie to the sheriff. Returning to his home after an absence abroad, St. Elmo finds Edna, who had been left alone by the death of her grandfather, established there as a companion to his mother. St. Elmo has returned home transformed by brooding over his wrongs into a malignant cynic, seeing nothing but evil in the world and its people. He subjects his former fiancee, who is also living in his mother's household as a guest, to endless persecution by sneers and jibes and constant allusion to her faithlessness of the past.

Edna by her devotion to his mother and her innocence, girlish sweetness and puritanical concention of the right and wrong, arouses his interest, and in one of his cynical moods he intrusts to her keeping the key to a secret hiding place in which are kept some letters written by his former fiancee, who tries to forcibly gain possession of them through Edna. In one of the strangest dramatic scenes of the play Edna proves faithful to St. Elmo's trust in her, and he begins to realize then that one woman at least is faithful.

The picture for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday is a Paramount picture entitled: "Civilian Clothes" featuring Thomas Meeagian in the leading role.

The play for Thursday, Friday and Saturday entitled: "Why Girls Leave Home." This play is a White Slave play, showing how innocent country girls are enticed to leave their peaceful, quiet home to live a life of vice and shame. The snares and pitfalls of our big cities, the silver-voiced, well dressed stranger, his promise, and sweet words that are only the voice of the devil.

Mothers watch your daughters.
Fathers watch your daughters.
Brothers watch your sisters.

A clean moral play with plenty of action, showing life as it really is in large cities.

The feature play for the last half—Thursday, Friday and Saturday entitled: "The Jailbird", a Paramount picture.

Sunday, Jan. 23, at 8 P. M., a benefit concert for West Quincy Knights of Columbus.

Four big acts: Baker & Cameron, singing and talking act; George Clark, comedy singing and talking act; Chester & Allen, piano and singing and talking act; and William & Allen, ventriloquist. The feature picture for Sunday is a Paramount production, entitled: "The Honeymoon", featuring Constance Talmadge, as leading role. Pathe Weekly will also be shown at both shows.

—The afternoons are noticebly longer.

—Tuesday afternoon the regular meeting of the Philergians of Braintree was held in Cochato club hall. The president, Mrs. Cynthia S. Case conducted a short business meeting after which Dr. Mary Lakeman, assistant director of hygiene, connected with the State department of Public Health addressed the club. She explained the meaning and benefits to be derived from the maternity bill. She stated that the bill last year provided for medical care as well as nursing, also providing a cash benefit. The present bill places expert trained nursing within the reach of those needing it. Jefferson L. Harbour of Boston spoke interestingly on the subject: "Blessed be humor."

MONDAY CLUB

The January 17 meeting of the Monday Club was a pleasant blending of business and pleasure, the business coming first. It was decided that the club should do its bit in public affairs and it voted assistance to the Hoover Fund for children across the sea, to help the campaign for clean movies, and also the work of forest conservation. Miss Corino read extracts from the Sheppard-Towner bill and asked for the women's help in supporting this.

Delegates were appointed to attend the midwinter meeting of Federation at Melrose Highlands on February 9, the delegates being two former presidents, Miss Richards and Mrs. Worster and Mrs. Jewell the present head of the club.

Mrs. McGill announced the next meeting of the Civics Club would be at the home of Mrs. James D. Bosworth, Broad street, East Weymouth at 2.30 P. M., Friday, Jan. 21 and will be addressed by Dr. Mary R. Lakeman on the subject of Public Hygiene. The announcement was given of the whist party at Mrs. Perry's, Hillcrest road, East Weymouth, on Monday, Jan. 24.

Then came the pleasure of the meeting; Miss Doris Bates Garey gave a "Current Events" paper, taking the subject of immigration as her subject, and showed that she had given the subject reading and study and presented it in a manner which an older one might have envied. A group of songs followed by Miss Leone Marquis of Boston, accompanied by Miss Helen Dawson and each one was pleasing. Following this came Miss Ellerbe Wood with her delightful reading of "The Country Cousin." With her changing voice to fit the different characters, the few explanatory words to tell of the changing scenes and the lively dialogues that told the story, then came a sense of a dream play and one wondered if she ever gave the reading to those among us who cannot see and so made up to them for what they otherwise miss in plays.

The AMERICAN LEGION

HEAD OF AMERICANISM BOARD

Henry J. Ryan of Boston, Mass., Is Named Chairman of Legion's Reorganized Commission.

Typical of the spirit of the American Legion is the appointment of Henry J. Ryan of Boston, Mass., a former apprentice seaman in the navy, to succeed Arthur Woods of New York, who was a colonel in the army and former police commissioner of New York city, as chairman of the Legion's reorganized Americanism commission, headquarters of which is at national headquarters at Indianapolis.

When the war broke out Mr. Ryan attempted to enlist several times in the army, but was refused because of his defective eyesight. At last the navy accepted him, but he was ordered to remain on shore duty. During the various drives for Liberty loans and war funds the newly appointed chairman acquired a national reputation as an orator, especially on subjects involving patriotism and Americanism.

Other members of the commission are To serve one year, Fiorella H. LaGuardia, New York city; William B. Follett, Portland, Ore.; E. K. Bixby, Muskogee, Okla.; Edgar H. Baird, Philadelphia; Garland W. Powell, Cumberland, Md.; Richard F. Beirns, Richmond, Va. To serve two years, Peyton H. Hoge, Jr., Louisville, Ky.; A. H. Gansser, Bay City, Mich.; Col. Gordon Johnson, U. S. A., chief of staff to Gen. Leonard Wood, Fort Sheridan, Ill. To serve three years, Will Percy, Greenville, Miss.; Dwight Davis, St. Louis; F. O. Horton, Des Moines, Ia.; Lindsey Blayney, Houston, Tex., and Leonard Withington, Honolulu, Hawaii.

It will be the Legion's aim under Mr. Ryan to co-ordinate and consolidate the activities for the promotion of Americanism of the Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, Knights of Columbus, Masons, Salvation Army, National Security league and many other organizations. To this end a conference will be held in Washington soon.

MAN OF TRAVEL EXPERIENCE

Samuel, Adjutant of Legion, Department of Kansas, Has Seen Much of Broad World.

After traveling over pretty much all of the continents of North America, Europe and Asia, Frank E. Samuel has settled down into a busy life as adjutant of the American Legion, department of Kansas, with headquarters in Topeka.

Samuel was born in Downing, Mo., in 1889. Armed with a college degree in 1912 he started out to see the world. What part of it he missed in civilian pursuits was made up to him when he joined the Three Hundred and Fifty-third infantry regiment of the famous Eighty-ninth division and served in all the battles in which that outfit participated.

Samuel, on his return to civil life, became assistant state adjutant of the Legion in Kansas and was made adjutant in September, 1919. He was recently re-elected for a two-year term.

GENERAL'S WIFE NEW LEADER

Mrs. Clarence Edwards Is Chosen President of Massachusetts Department of Auxiliary.

Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, who commanded the Twenty-sixth division through its training period in the States, in quiet defensive sectors and in its later participation in almost every major offensive of the war, is the idol of thousands of New England members of the American Legion and other former service men.

Mrs. Clarence R. Edwards, his wife, is now placed in a similar position by the mothers, wives, sisters and daughters of these veterans, for Mrs. Edwards was elected president of the Massachusetts department of the women's auxiliary of the American Legion at a recent state convention of that organization.

The newly elected president is a resident of Newton, Mass. She has been active in work for the benefit of New England members of the American Legion and other former service men.

CONGRESS IS URGED TO ACT

Five Provisions Requested in Aid of Disabled Veterans, Amending Vocational Training Law.

Amendment of the law under which disabled veterans of the World war are given vocational training, so as to provide five things demanded by the last convention of the American Legion at Cleveland was urged in congress by Legion representatives.

The five provisions requested by the Legion are:

1. Vocational training for American citizens who served with the allied armies, who were disabled and who are not entitled to training under the present law.

2. Training with pay for all disabled veterans with 10 per cent or more disability, instead of training with pay for some and training without pay for others, as now provided.

3. Vocational training for the widows and orphans of all men who died in the service.

4. The right of the federal board for vocational education to give all disabled men in training such medical care and treatment as is necessary to keep them at their courses.

5. That all disabled men in training shall receive $100 a month from the government while in training and those with dependents $120 a month, instead of different sums based upon the cost of living in different localities as now provided.

A special plea was made by John Thomas Taylor of the national legislative committee of the Legion for vocational training for the widows and orphans of the American dead of the World war. He said that undoubtedly the 50,000 American children whose fathers slept in Flanders fields were entitled to the same educational advantages that they would have had, were their fathers alive and able to provide for them. The widows of the men who died in France, he added, were likewise entitled, the bread-winning member of the family having been killed in defense of the country, to be taught some kind of work of trade.

EDITOR WAS ON FIRING LINE

Commander of Missouri Department of Legion One of Many Newspaper Men Who Heard Call.

John Francis Williams, commander of the Missouri department of the Legion, is one of thousands of newspaper men who left their typewriters when the war broke out. Enlisting as a private in the Missouri National Guard, Mr. Williams rose to the rank of first lieutenant.

In the A. E. F., he served as a machine gun officer with the Thirty-fifth division in the Vosges mountains and in the Argonne-Meuse drive. After the armistice, he served as instructor in the A. E. F. university at Beaune and later assisted in publicity in connection with the interallied games.

Mr. Williams, who is a member of Robert S. Thurman post 13, Joplin, Mo., served as post commander and state master-at-arms previously to his election as department head. He is editor of the Joplin News Herald.

ORGANIZATION IS HIS TASK

Spokane (Wash.) Man Will Supervise Work of Enrolling Every Former Service Buddie.

Edward H. Prell of Spokane, Wash., was recently appointed director of the organization division at national headquarters of the American Legion. He succeeds Russell G. Creviston, who is now assistant national adjutant.

Mr. Prell served overseas with the One Hundred and Forty-sixth field artillery and participated in two major offensives of the World war. After his discharge from the army, Mr. Prell was active in the early organization of the Legion in his state. The supervision and direction of the Legion's 1921 campaign to enroll every eligible former service man in its ranks will be in the hands of the new director.

RAISED BIG CHRISTMAS FUND

Adjutant of Illinois Department of Legion Had Aid of Actress in Raising Christmas Money.

When William Q. Setliffe, adjutant of the Illinois department of the American Legion, started the Legion campaign which raised $50,000 for Christmas entertainments for sick and disabled veterans in Illinois hospitals, he called upon Miss Floe Bert, a well-known actress, to assist in making the undertaking a success.

Miss Bert gave a large number of entertainments in Illinois cities, the proceeds of which were applied to the Legion's fund.

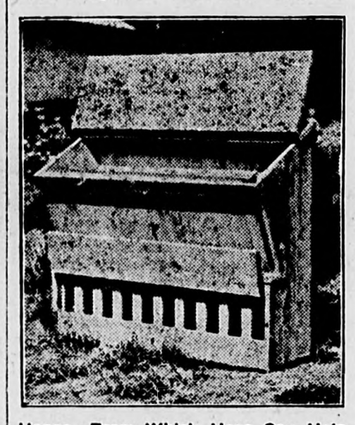

POULTRY

FEEDS FOR BACKYARD FLOCK

Dry Mash Is Recommended in Addition to Assortment of Grains and Table Scraps.

In addition to the grain and the table scraps given a backyard flock it is well to feed a dry mash. This dry mash is composed of various ground grains and is placed in a mash hopper or box from which the hens can help themselves. The advantage of feeding such a mash is that the hens always have access to feed, and this tends to make up for any faulty, inexperienced, or insufficient feeding. The hens do not like the dry mash so well that they are likely to overeat, but it will supply a source of feed in case they are not getting enough grain feed. The dry mash also provides a suitable medium for feeding beef scrap, a certain amount of which may or may not be necessary, depending upon the amount of meat scraps available in the table waste. If the hens show a tendency to become overfat it may be desirable to close the mash hopper during a part of the day and allow them access to it only during a certain period, preferably the afternoon.

A good dry mash, recommended by poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, is composed of equal parts by weight of corn meal, wheat bran, wheat middlings, and beef scrap. Another mash is composed of three parts by weight of corn meal and one part beef scrap. Still a third mash, which has given excellent results, is composed of one pound of wheat bran, one pound of wheat middlings, 6.5 pounds of beef scrap, and 16.5 pounds of corn meal. The beef scrap used in the dry mash is usually the most expensive ingredient, but it is an essential part of the mash and very efficient for egg production. It should not be eliminated or reduced unless the quantity of meat in the table scraps is considerable or unless some other product can be substituted for it. Fish scrap, when available, may replace the beef scrap, or cottonseed meal can be used to replace one-half the beef scrap in the mash. No attempt should be made to replace more than half the beef scrap with cottonseed meal, as the results in egg production and in the quality of the eggs will be unsatisfactory.

Green-cut bone can often be purchased from the butcher. This material when procured fresh makes an excellent substitute for beef scrap. It should be purchased in small quantities, as it cannot be kept fresh for any length of time and when spoiled may cause severe bowel trouble. It is best fed in a trough not oftener than every other day, allowing about one-half ounce per bird. Should severe or continued looseness of the bowels follow the feeding of green-cut bone it should be discontinued or the quantity reduced.

VICE OF FEATHER PLUCKING

Some Authorities Attribute Habit to Lack of Scratching Facilities While Confined.

Among the annoying vices that fowls in confinement will contract is that of feather plucking. The reason for it is not clearly established; some attribute it to the birds being kept in close quarters devoid of scratching facilities, while others are of the opinion that it is a lack of meat in the ration or a want of green stuff. But whatever it is it is a nasty vice. Changing conditions will sometimes bring relief; others advocate a change of ration, giving stuffs of a cooling nature to which has been added a pinch of salt. If only one or two hens are guilty in a flock they had better be killed before others take up the habit. Paring down the beak so that it will not close tight to nip or pull out the feathers will be found effective. The busy hen with room to turn around in and green, wholesome food scarcely ever contracts this vice.

HENS BETTER THAN PULLETS

Older Fowls Are Preferred for Breeding Purposes—Cockerels Most Satisfactory.

Usually hens make better breeders than pullets. Cockerels, if well grown and matured, often give better fertility than older birds. However, cock birds that have proved good breeders should be used.

USE OF TREES AND SHRUBS

EASY TO GROW GRASS LAWN

Perfect Greensward May Be Quickly Realized by the Use of Novel English Method.

It is proverbially a slow business getting a good grass lawn in a garden, but a new English idea makes it possible to secure a fine stretch of verdure just as one would buy a carpet at the stores. Grass seed is sown thickly on strong canvas and, when this is thickly covered with growth it is ready for making the lawn.

The site is well prepared, being made perfectly level, and special attention is given to getting the soil so that it is a favorable rooting medium for the little plants. Then the grass mats are put down on sections, these being closely fitted together. As time goes on the roots push down through the canvas and, in this way, establish a permanent lawn. Ultimately the material will rot. The value of this lies in the fact that an immediate effect can be secured. It is quite easy to have a splendid grass lawn in a situation where, a few hours before there was nothing of the kind. Thenceforward the grass will go on improving and the little plants speedily take a hold on the soil.—Scientific American.

Trees Beyond Valuation.

Ten million dollars' damage annually is done to the shade trees and hardy shrubs of the country by shade tree insects, according to estimates made by the bureau of entomology, United States Department of Agriculture.

It is very difficult to estimate the money value of the shade trees and shrubs of the country, but a very conservative estimate would place their value at $1,000,000,000. These figures were reached after extensive correspondence with the forestry and other authorities of states and municipalities. A more definite census is aimed at, but the figures are taken as dependable for general purposes. They are based on the value of trees to cities, parks and private property, and have no reference to the bare intrinsic value of wood or lumber. An old oak tree which, because of its condition is not worth $2 for lumber, may add $500 to the value of the city lot on which it is located.

City Has Right Idea.

A campaign to beautify school surroundings has been started by the architectural-engineering department of the public schools. About $35,000 will be spent this year, it is announced.

A. D. Weeks, director of the department, says that from a landscape standpoint Detroit schools rank poorly in comparison with eastern cities though they compare favorably in architecture.

In the past, work of this sort has been largely assumed by the pupils who performed the labor and bore the expense.—Detroit Free Press.

Ribbon Trimmed Taffeta Frocks

WHETHER they are made of satin or taffeta, many of the new afternoon frocks appear to exist with a single ambition, and that is to set forth one of the many ingenious ways in which narrow ribbons may be used as an embellishment for them. Designers appear to have discovered in ribbon trimmings a new world to conquer and they are busily exploring it. Nothing seems to suit quite so well the character of taffeta frocks as the unpretentious, pretty ribbon fancies; it is in the nature of things that they should replace embroideries and beadings.

Among the afternoon frocks made ready for spring appears the simple and fascinating model shown in the picture. A glance reveals that it has not discarded the plain bodice and elbow sleeves of many taffeta frocks and that it approves the tunic with asis, for it has a long and very ne, which is bordered with circles and scrolls of narrow ribbon, shirred along the edge, and sewed down to the silk. There is a belt of taffeta—a bias French fold and the sleeves are prettily finished with the shirred ribbon, which in this case is in the same color as the dress.

Some of the new taffeta or satin afternoon frocks have bodices of georgette crepe in a contrasting color, trimmed with narrow faille ribbon like the skirt in color. The ribbon is used to finish edges in borders, in little loops sewed over the crepe and in hanging ends or short tabs set close together. Frocks of dark taffeta have the full skirts or tunics finished with a wide border in lattice work, made of narrow ribbon stitched down on both edges. Very narrow-fluted or plaited frills in bright colors, edge-deep slashes at the bottom of tunics and, for both skirts and bodices, ribbon rosettes find many points of vantage.

Blouses Strike a Quiet Note

NEW blouses add their testimony to that of sports clothes in prophesying that there will be no riot of vivid colors this spring, but, on the contrary, pale tints and more or less sedate shades. Unless the goddess of fashion changes her mind, much quiet refinement is to succeed the gorgeous and lavishly ornamented fall apparel—that is the note struck by new blouses. Autumn was ushered in with vivid hues that rivaled its bright foliage, and the most colorful and intricate of embroideries helped to make apparel gorgeous. The present indications are that the softer and daintier colors of spring blossoms are to be reflected in the new blouses at least.

So far few of the models presented have a peplum, but in quite a number of them the blouse extends a little below the waist line and dispenses with a girdle. Long sleeves predominate and shawl collars, high at the back and open at the front, which leaves opportunity for vestees. Wide tucks, ribbon frills, either fluted or plaited, cluny and Irish laces and fine needlework in embroideries that match the color of the blouse account for much of the decoration. Narrow ribbons are also used in tabs, rosettes and fanciful ways as an embellishment. A noteworthy example with ribbon trimming is made of tan colored tricolette with little leaves simulated in narrow, brown faille ribbon sewed at intervals all over it. Crepe-de-chine blouses, with deep, close-fitting cuffs and shawl collar crocheted of heavy silk, are among the novelties.

An exception that proves the rule of short smocks and blouses makes its bid for favor in the long smock at the left of the picture above. It remains loyal to beads as a decoration, and also pins its faith to elbow sleeves. The smock at the right, of satin, is short, and avails itself of the mode for combinations of two colors. Its sleeves are typical and so is the stitchery that finishes it. There are a great many examples of two-color combinations among georgette blouses.

PREPARING LATE WINTER DISHES

Some New and Excellent Recipes Given to Tempt Languid Spring Appetites.

VEGETABLES ARE NECESSARY

Formulas Tried Out in Home Economics Kitchen of Department of Agriculture for Stored and Canned Garden Products.

Every housekeeper knows that by the last of February or first of March the average family is tired of winter vegetables, and yet vegetables are just as necessary in the spring diet, if not more so, than in the diet of any other season. So the clever cook uses new recipes for the stored and canned products of the garden and in that way tempts the languid spring appetites.

The following recipes are recommended by the experiment kitchen of the United States Department of Agriculture:

Tomato Toast.

Rub one quart of stewed tomatoes through a strainer. Return to stewpan and, if not already seasoned, add two level teaspoonfuls of salt, half a teaspoonful of pepper and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Place on the fire and cook five minutes. Have the bottom of a hot platter covered with well-toasted slices of bread and pour the hot tomato over it. Place a dropped or poached egg on each slice of toast and serve at once.

Puree of Cabbage and Potatoes.

1 pint boiled finely-minced cabbage.
6 medium-sized potatoes.
2 tablespoonfuls of butter or savory drippings.
2 teaspoonfuls salt.
½ pint hot milk.
⅛ teaspoonful pepper.

Peel the potatoes and put them in a stewpan with boiling water enough to cover them. Cook just 30 minutes. Pour off the water and mash fine and light. Beat in the hot milk, seasoning, and cabbage. Cook about five minutes longer.

Navy Bean Salad.

Soak beans overnight in plenty of cold water. In the morning pour off the water and put the beans in a stewpan with cold water enough to cover them generously. Let them come to the boiling point in this water, then drain. If the beans are old and hard, for each quart put a piece of soda about the size of a large bean in the water in which they are soaked overnight, also in the first water in which they are boiled.

The scalded and drained beans should be put back in the stewpan and covered generously with boiling water. Add one tablespoonful of salt for one quart of beans. They should now cook slowly, with the cover partially off the stewpan until tender. Drain, and when cool serve with the following salad dressing:

Cream Salad Dressing.

1 cupful cream (sour or sweet).
½ cupful tomato catsup.
2 tablespoonfuls salad oil.
2 tablespoonfuls vinegar.
2 tablespoonfuls sugar.
1 teaspoonful salt.

Mix the oil, salt, sugar and vinegar together, then beat in the catsup and finally add the cream, beating it in gradually. If lettuce is not available on which to serve the salad, a crisp leaf from a cabbage heart is a good substitute.

Spinach Loaf.

A small can of spinach, chard or beet tops will serve seven or eight people if it is made into a loaf combined with rice or bread crumbs. Asparagus or string beans are also good served this way.

1 can chopped spinach.
4 cupfuls boiled rice.
2 cupfuls white sauce.
1 red pepper.

Make a thick white sauce of two cupfuls of milk, four tablespoonfuls of flour, four tablespoonfuls of butter and one teaspoonful of salt. Melt fat and mix with flour, add to milk and stir over fire until it thickens. Mix with the rice, chopped spinach and pepper. Form into a loaf and bake 20 or 30 minutes.

RABBIT SALAD

To each cupful of diced cooked rabbit meat add one-half cupful celery and one-fourth cupful salad dressing, one-half teaspoonful salt, and a few grains of cayenne pepper. Mix thoroughly and pour into salad bowl lined with lettuce. Put one or two tablespoonfuls of dressing on top and garnish with strings of green and red pepper.

Either a mayonnaise or a boiled dressing can be used for this salad.

NOT DIFFICULT TASK TO DESTROY ROACHES

Use of Sodium Fluorid Is Simple and Effective Plan.

Obnoxious Insects Can Be Completely Exterminated With Little Trouble and Expense by Dusting With This Substance.

One of the most effective and simple means of ridding premises of roaches is dusting with commercial sodium fluorid, either pure or diluted one-half with some inert substance such as powdered gypsum or flour. This remedy is one recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture.

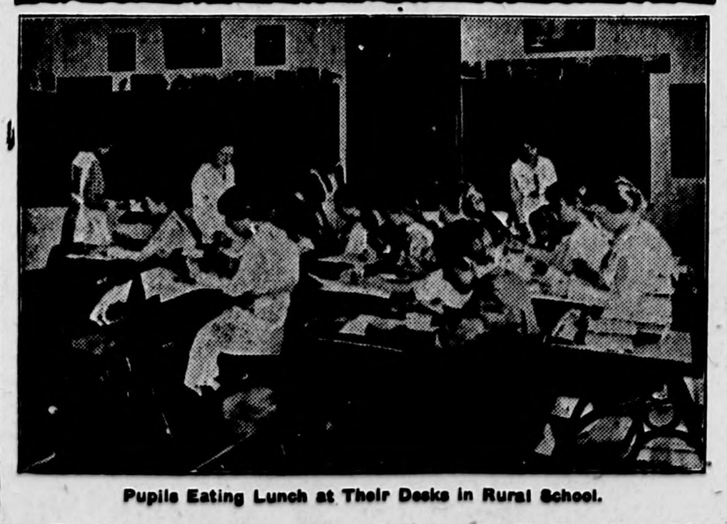

Numerous practical tests conducted in lunchrooms, bakeries, milk-bottle exchanges, etc., have shown that with the use of this substance roaches can be completely exterminated with very little trouble and cost and with none of the possible dangers attending the use of hydrocyanic-acid gas, another efficient means of control. With the use of some dust gun or blower the sodium fluorid can be thoroughly dusted over the shelves, tables, floors and the runways and hiding places of the roaches.

The immediate effect of the powder is to cause these insects to come out of their retreats and rush about more or less blindly, showing evidence of discomfort, to be followed in the course of a few hours by their death. The dead or paralyzed roaches can be swept up and burned, and complete extermination is effected within 24 hours. It is not definitely known whether the sodium acts through the breathing pores or as a stomach poison. Probably, however, it acts in both ways, inasmuch as it has been found to kill caterpillars fed on foliage dusted with it.

Even Potatoes Taste Like a New Vegetable When Prepared in a New Way.

IMPORTANCE OF HOT LUNCHES

Pupils Eating Lunch at Their Desks in Rural School.

Teachers and parents are commencing to realize the importance of hot school lunches, and the home-demonstration agents sent out by the United States Department of Agriculture and the state colleges are helping to establish hot lunches in communities which are awake to their value. Last year these extension workers, who are trained in home economics, helped establish hot lunches in 2,929 schools. The work will be continued this year on an even larger scale. In some counties a wall of prejudice against the innovation has to be broken down before it can be started. Where this is true, the success of the hot lunch in one school, where it has been established, is usually followed by a demand for something similar in all the adjacent schools.

FIGHTING RATS WITH VARNISH

New Form of Trap Used on London Docks Said to Have Had Gratifying Success.

It is computed that the London docks contain about 1,000,000 rats, which attack grain, food, and other cargoes, causing about $2,000,000 loss per annum. A society was established to exterminate this destructive enemy, but the congested state of the wharves made their schemes inoperative. Now a new benefactor has come forward with a "trap" that opens up a possibility of putting armies of rodents out of business. The process employed is simple. Traps are placed along or near rat holes. The trap is made of cardboard covered with lithographic varnish. The varnish is warmed by heating its container in boiling water till the varnish becomes sufficiently liquid, when it is spread 1-16 to 1-8 of an inch thick on pieces of strawboard or thickish cardboard, measuring about 15 in. by 12 in. A margin of about 1 in. is left clear of varnish, and bait placed in the center of the board, where it adheres to the varnish. Bags of 60 at a time have been secured. The medical officer of health for the port of London reports favorably of the antidote to the rat thief, and gives it as his opinion that once their tails stick on the board they are doomed, and that the majority die of fright. Another feature is that if two rats get on to the varnish together one of them kills the other, evidently thinking the other is holding him.

HELD BACK TIME'S PROGRESS

Announcing Hour of Noon Secondary in Importance to Mexican Servant's Other Duties.

A certain village in northern Mexico did not boast of a town clock. When twelve o'clock arrived the parish priest used to tell his servant to mount the berfry and strike the church bell twelve times, so that the villagers would know that it was high noon.

One of the neighbors, who had a watch, noticed that for some days twelve o'clock had struck a few minutes late. Thinking that perhaps the priest's watch was slow, he asked the mozo (servant) why it was that he had delayed in striking the hour. The mozo answered:

"It is this way: The padrecito tells me it is time to strike twelve; but just as I am to start up the ladder the cook tells me to get the tortillas. So I have to go after tortillas, and when I get back and climb the ladder again it makes the noon late."

Foch Saved the Day.

M. Poincare, as president of the French academy, had the task of welcoming Marshal Foch when that soldier was a member of the academy and, in the course of his remarks said:

"Field Marshal French was on the point of moving back his heavy artillery and beating a retreat. You rushed to Vlamertinghe and summoned him to you. 'If we make known your weakness,' you declared, 'we shall be carried away like a wisp of straw. Keep at all costs your First corps where it is; I will myself attack on the right and on the left with French troops.' As you spoke you took a sheet of paper to the desk; hastily you scribbled four lines in which you made clear your thought and you handed the note to the field marshal. He read it, thought a moment, called a staff officer, and said to him: 'Go and carry out this order.' Disaster was averted."

Sand Long Retained Properties.

Prof. H. L. Fairchild of the University of Rochester and Dr. H. Carrington Bolton of New York found the sands at Rockaway beach emitting a high musical note one summer day in 1884. They collected some of the sand and took it home, where Prof. Fairchild put in a large glass bottle a sample, but except for that one instance the sand has been undisturbed for more than thirty-five years.

Professor Fairchild writes now to Science, saying that on December 2, 1919, he poured the contents of the bottle into a stocking and found that when quickly compressed it still gave out its characteristic high note, audible at a considerable distance. But since he spread it out in a dry room and handled it considerably it has lost its sonorous quality.

Hotels in Japan.

Plans are under consideration for providing the larger cities of Japan—Tokyo, Yokohama, Kobe and Osaka—with more hotels, it was announced recently in Tokyo by D. Shono, general manager of the Japan tourist bureau. He said, however, that it would be some time before these hotels are erected. "Efforts are being made to relieve the congestion in the city hotels by inducing guests to travel in the country, where hotels have room to spare." It is proposed to supply wireless information to incoming boats concerning the number of unoccupied rooms in the various hotels. The matter is under negotiation with the companies.

The Usual Thing.

"It says in the paper, here," remarked Mrs. Fields, in the midst of her reading, "that in a debate in congress Hon. Benjamin Blawhaw rose and shouted—"

"Don't bother to read the rest of it, Debby," interrupted Farmer Fields. "The honorable didn't say any more when he shouted than he does when he keeps still."—Kansas City Star.

free Negroes and sold them into slavery. While floating with the tide load of goods, young Lincoln becomes the central figure in a contest of craftiness and violence with the worst of these gangs who have stolen a free negress from New Salem, his home town. The antics and pranks of Rastus, a little black urchin, cause much excitement and furnish the side-splitting fun of this picturesque romance of the Mississippi.

Wednesday, Jan. 26, at 8 P. M. a splendid program of motion pictures will be presented with organ accompaniment. Booth Tarkington's story "Edgar's Hamlet", a perfect scream of fun: "The Slave Market", a chapter from "The Son of Democracy" and Scenic feature.

TOWN BRIEFS

AN ASSET

"If a town were to check up its assets, chief among them would be its newspaper. It is the one valuable common possession. No matter who owns the stock of the company that publishes it, or sits in the editorial chair, the newspaper belongs to the people, and in a very real sense a town and its people may be accurately judged by the kind and quality of the paper that is sent forth. If it is a live, pushing, forward-looking publication, the town lives and moves forward."—Henry W. Blood.

Why Not a Tent For Our Annual Town Meeting?

Weymouth's prospect of securing special legislation relative to town meetings is very remote. That is, no Act will be passed in 1921 that will become operative in 1921, and the warrant for the Annual Town Meeting must be issued in a few days.

Dedham, which is smaller than Weymouth, has decided to hold its town meeting in a tent, and the innovation is receiving some favor elsewhere. The Gazette and Transcript reprints in full the leading editorial of the Sunday Herald:

"Dedham intends to spend $1500 for the use of a tent, holding 2000 persons, for town meeting purposes on three evenings in the near future. At first glance the idea jars the conservative New Englander. But as he reflects upon the problem Dedham thus proposes to solve he begins to ask "Why not?" and in the end finds little but prejudice against the idea.

"For Massachusetts contains many towns whose available buildings for years have been taxed to accommodate the male voters at town meeting time. Now suffrage has come, women are manifesting serious interest in their new responsibilities, and with the electorate thus greatly increased the use of the old halls will be out of the question if any truly representative gathering is to assemble and do business. Certainly the average woman voter will not take part in a scramble in which a thousand persons try to find places in a room designated to accomodate five hundred.

"It may be that the limited form of town meeting is the real answer to the problem the doubling of the electorate has brought. But the earliest time at which towns below 12,000 in population can adopt the limited system is twenty-two months ahead, after November of next year. These towns must hold their meetings in the open, erect bigger halls, or adopt some such plan as the one Dedham will try.

"There is no real loss of dignity in the use of a tent. Dedham deserves commendation for undertaking to find a way to insure to all its citizens the sacred right to participate in town government. Indeed, legal complications might ensue if because of an inadequate meeting place any number of qualified voters were excluded from town meeting. No Massachusetts town would consider the use of a tent permanently. But until better arrangements can be made the Dedham scheme deserves consideration.

Old Times Recalled About Jackson Square

From 1850 to 1860

Entering Jackson Square from the south the first building on the left was that now occupied by McCarthy's restaurant; hardly changed since those days.

It was at that time occupied by Melvin French, "Trumon" French we called him, who sold stoves and tinware, the latter he made in the room in the rear, as at that time about all the tinware used was made in local shops, and then sold, or peddled from the high (bright red usually) tincarts rarely seen now.

Did anyone ever see a tin peddlar's cart out in rainy weather? Kitchen ware at that time was either tinned or cast iron, rarely of copper. That were would wear years, to the modern substitutes' months, perhaps longer than our agate ware.

Collecting old junk was a branch of the trade, but it did not include news. Newspapers were all single sheets, papers, the principal thing now folded to make four pages. Sunday newspapers were unknown in both city and country, as were electric lights, oil-stoves, phonographs, telephones, trolleys, bicycles, autos, movies, and a hundred and one things we think we cannot do without now. Yet some there are, who believe that people were as happy, or happier, than today.

Old fogies! Fossils! Back numbers! Well, perhaps!

But to get back to Mr. French, who seemed to us very old, though probably about 45 to 50. A tall, quiet, yet genial man, who welcomed the visits of children who came in to see him at work, and to gather the round pieces of tin scattered about the floor. A few years later he closed out the business, and for years worked in Boston. One of our first commuters, of which John P. Lovell may have been the pioneer.

Later, as before, this building was a grocery store. Still later, a market for many years.

Next in line was the dwelling of its owner, Lovell Bicknell, a man of means and influence, somewhat imperious and choloric, but beneath it was a kind and generous heart.

Mr. Bicknell (Uncle Lovell, he was sometimes called) a man of 65, held several town offices and for years had charge of the herring fisheries, at that time owned by the Weymouth Iron Co. People came many miles to get the herring, of which several hundred thousand were taken each year.

At that time teams could drive up to Mr. Bicknell's front door and down the other side. Below the pump still there and abutting on the street line) was a long shed, usually full of two-feet lengths of hard wood. Mr. Bicknell had two open fireplaces.

Adjoining the shed was a pigsty. (We had no Board of Health.) Back of the house, parallel with Broad street with no buildings on the left side, stretched his fine meadow, back to the estates of John Pratt, whose dwelling is now owned by Mrs. Marion French, and that of Cyrus Washburn, East Weymouth's first real estate promoter.

Land syndicates and promoters of 1920, have nothing on "Cy" Washburn. He bought many acres of land here and built scores of houses. Most of the later ones with lumber from "wrecked" buildings in Boston. Some of the houses had hardly two doors or windows alike, and one for years was pointed out as being sheathed wholly with fence pickets from "down East."

Mr. Washburn, coming here with nothing but his trade and business ability, became the heaviest tax-payers in the town. Just imagine what he would have thought, and said, too, of the $30 rate of 1920. For many years he lived on the corner of Broad and Shawmut streets. Later in life removing to Wellesley, where he died in 1899, aged 87. O. L. DUNN

Congressional Medal to Second-Lieut. Ralph Talbot

Mrs. Mary Talbot of South Weymouth has recently received from the Secretary of Navy Daniels a gold "Navy Medal of Honor", together with citation, which decoration has been posthumously awarded to her son, the late Second Lieutenant Ralph Talbot, U. S. M. C.

The medal is for valor in the United States Marine Corps at Pittham, Belgium, Oct. 14, 1918, and the medal is suitably inscribed. The citation reads:

Mrs. R. J. Talbot:

The Secretary of the Navy,
Washington, Nov. 11, 1920.

In the name of Congress, the President of the United States takes pleasure in presenting the Medal of Honor to Ralph Talbot, (Deceased) 2nd Lt. U. S. M. C., for service above and beyond the call of duty during the World War, as set forth in the following citation:

"For exceptionally meritorious service and extraordinary heroism while attached to Squadron C, First Marine Aviation Force in France. He participated in numerous air raids into enemy territory, and on October 8, 1918, while on such a raid, he was attacked by nine enemy scouts, and in the fight that followed shot down an enemy plane. Also on Oct. 14, 1918 while on an air raid over Pittham, Belgium, Lt. Talbot and one other plane became detached from the formation due to loss of power by motor, and were attacked by twelve enemy scouts. During the severe fight that followed his plane shot down one of the enemy scouts. His observer was shot through the elbow and his gun jammed. He cleared the jam with one hand while Lt. Talbot maneuvered to gain time, and then returned to fight. The observer fought on until shot twice in the stomach and once in the hip. When he collapsed Lt. Talbot attacked the nearest enemy scout with his front guns and shot him down. With his observer unconscious and his motor failing he dived to escape the balance of the enemy and crossed the German trenches at an altitude of fifty feet, landing at the nearest hospital and left his observer and returned alone to his asrodrome.

For the President,
(Signed) Josephus Daniels,
Secretary of the Navy.

The Gazette and Transcript unites with the Commandant of the Marine Corps in heartiest congratulations to Mrs. Talbot, upon being the mother of a son so noble. Only two gold medals were awarded in the Marines, and only 13 in the service. They are

A complete upset of the theory that learning must be acquired, is seen in the remarkable case of twelve-year-old Edward Berkof of Brooklyn, N. Y. About eighteen months ago Edward fell while at play. Before the fall he was backward in his studies, and mathematics, according to his teachers, was probably his hardest subject. His skill in handlig figures now is amazing.

"MY BABY, CAROLINE."

Synopsis. — Lonely and almost friendless, Tonnibel Devon, living on a canal boat with a brutal father and a worn-out, discouraged mother, wanders into a Salvation armyhall at Ithaca, N. Y. There she meets a young Salvation army captain, Philip MacCauley. Uriah Devon, Tony's father, returns to the boat from a protracted spree and announces he has arranged for Tony to marry a worthless companion of his, Reginald Brown. Mrs. Devon objects, and Uriah beats her. She intimates there is a secret connected with Tonnibel.

CHAPTER III.

The Picture of a Baby.

Tonnibel's heart jumped almost into her throat, then seemed to cease beating. There stood her father growling, enraged and drunk, and as if she were dead and no longer able to help her child, her mother lay almost within touching distance. If Uriah carried out his plans, then the horrid fellow there would soon claim her as his woman. That thought frightened her so that she stepped back as the newcomer came upon the deck.

"What's the matter, Ry?" he asked quite casually.

"He's killed mummy," burst forth the girl. "And if both you fellers don't want to get pinched, you'd better scoot offen this boat."

Uriah laughed, and Reggie's high-pitched cackle followed.

"Been giving your woman a little discipline, eh, pal?" he demanded, turning on Devon. "Well, they all need it now and then. But she's the liveliest breathing corpse I ever saw. Did you hit 'er, Dev?"

"Yep," growled the other man, "and I'm goin' to beat Tony, too. The impudent brat says she wouldn't marry you if you was the last man livin'. You watch the brat there, Rege, while I duck Ede in the cabin."

Tonnibel, wide-eyed and suffering, saw her father lift her mother up in his brawny arms and carry her downstairs, none too gently. When he had disappeared, a throat sound made her swing her eyes to the other man. He was contemplating her with a smile, an evil smile, such as she hated in men. His white teeth seemed like many gleaming knives, sharp, strong and overhanging, his red lips spreading away from them.

He took a step toward her and stopped.

"Why so much fuss about nothing, my little one?" he said, cooing.

"Daddy said I had to marry you," breathed the girl, brushing back a stray curl from her brow. "But I don't! I'm goin' to stay with my mother on the Dirty Mary. There ain't no law forcing a girl to marry a man she don't like. And I hate you, see? Huh?"

"Who spoke of a law?" smiled Brown. "I didn't! But I do know, my little Tony-girl, that you'll say a very meek 'yes' when I get through with you."

Tonnibel suddenly shuddered and a hopeless, helpless feeling went in waves over her. Oh, to be anywhere in God's clear, clean world! Away from those gleaming lustful eyes! But she saw no opportunity to escape. Reginald Brown was blocking the small space through which she must fly if she were to be saved at all. She knew very well if she could hide for a little while the two men would drink until they slept. Then she could come back and help her mother. Plainly she had heard the woman weeping below in the cabin, and even more plainly to her suffering ears came Devon's blows, and after that—silence.

Her heart thumped like a hammer against her side. Behind her lay the shining lake. And one hasty glance over her shoulder only added to her fear. There was not a sign of a boat anywhere. She was frantic enough to scream if it would have done her any good.

"I think I'll kiss you, my little bird," said Reggie, suddenly, narrowing his eyes. "You're pretty enough for anyone to want to kiss. By Jove, I never realized until today just how much I liked you. If I kissed you, well—perhaps you'd change your mind about—about things."

Tonnibel slid backward to the boat rail. When she touched it, she whirled about and dove headlong into the lake.

When Reginald Brown saw the girl's feet disappear under the water, he uttered an oath and cried out. He hadn't expected such an action on her part. He ran to the cabin steps and screamed to Devon.

"She's in the lake, Ry," he shivered as the other man sprang to the deck.

When Tonnibel felt the water over her, she swept to the lake's bottom with one long stroke. Then deftly she rid herself of her dress skirt and began to swim swiftly under the water.

They were tense minutes that the two men stood waiting, until suddenly beyond them to the south a curly head came above the water's edge. Then they leapt to the shore and raced toward the place she must land. To the panting girl it was a race for life.

Suddenly, like a flashing glimpse from Heaven, the words, "Stand Still and See the Salvation of the Lord," floated before her eyes like a flame of gold. Philip MacCauley's deep voice seemed to speak them in her ringing ears immediately after. "Goddy," she groaned, "Salvation of the Lord, oh, darlin' Salvation."

Just then her feet touched the pebbles on the bottom of the lake. With one wild leap she was on the shore and up the bank, Uriah screaming at her to stop.

She heard the two men crashing after her. That her short, swift leaps could outdistance them for long if she tried for the boulevard, she had no hope. But all about her were giant friends with outstretched arms, offering her shelter. For one instant she paused, then sprang into the air, caught the lower branch of a great pine tree and like a squirrel scurried up it. Almost at the top, spanned over by the blue sky, she crawled out to the end of a big limb and clung to it. Beneath her the men paused and shouted curses up at her. Tonnibel cared nothing for curses. She'd heard them all her life, used them, too, when she felt like it.

Suddenly there came to her ears the lapping of a paddle in the lake. She flung up her head, peeped out and saw a canoe taking its leisurely way toward Ithaca. She bent over and looked down.

"Daddy," she cried, "there's some one rowin' on the lake. I'm goin' to holler like h—l. And when he comes, I'll tell 'im how you banged Ede, and if she's croaked you'll both get jailed. . . . Here's where I holler!"

She sent out a quick birdlike trill, and the man in the canoe held his paddle suspended in the air as he studied the forest. This didn't interest Tonnibel as much as did the fact that Devon and Reggie Brown jumped to their feet and raced away toward the boulevard. Tonnibel from her perch saw them disappear toward Ithaca before she slid to the ground.

The man in the canoe, too, made but a short pause before he dipped his paddle and shot away. On the deck of the boat Tonnibel picked up Gussie-Piglet and, dripping wet, went swiftly down the cabin steps. There she found her mother on the bunk, her face discolored by her husband's blows. She looked as if she were dead, and for a moment the forlorn child of the wilderness uttered heartbroken little cries for help.

The cabin was cluttered in the struggle Uriah Devon had had with his wife. In despair Tony looked around. The old clothes daddy had brought home were strewn over the cabin floor. Tonnibel heaped them together, then began to examine them.

They needed nothing but pressing. This she'd do to save her mother the work; and perhaps the fact that he had something ready to sell would make Uriah less brutal when he came back. In running her fingers over a coat, searching for small rents, Tony felt something between the lining and outside, a book it seemed like, which she hastily pulled out. It was small and much worn. There wasn't any money in it, in fact nothing but a picture, wrapped up in paper.

She looked at the picture curiously. A baby's face smiled up at her, and her own lips curved a bit in answer to the laughing challenge in the little one's eyes.

Then she turned it over.

On the back was written:

"My baby, Caroline Pendlehaven, aged six months. If this picture is ever lost the finder will receive a money reward by returning it to Dr. Paul Pendlehaven, Pendlehaven Place, Ithaca, N. Y."

Money was what Edie needed. Money, food and a doctor. If she could find this Paul Pendlehaven, perhaps in exchange for the picture he would give her a bottle of medicine for her mother.

Hastily changing her wet clothes, she slipped the baby's pictured face into her blouse, turned down the lamp and crept from the canal boat and with Gussie in her arms was soon lost in the forest.

CHAPTER IV.

The Pendlehavens.

In all of Tompkins county no family had more prestige than Pendlehavens'. John and Paul Pendlehaven had chosen medicine and surgery as their vocation when they were in college. John was a bachelor, and Paul a widower. At the time this story opens the latter was an invalid, his infirmity brought about by the death of his young wife, who had died at the birth of their daughter, and the disappearance of the little girl when she was but a year old. Pendlehaven place comprised a whole city block, on which stood a house, almost a mansion. In the family were John, Paul, and Mrs. Curtis and her two children, Katherine and Reginald. Mrs. Curtis was a second cousin to the Pendlehaven brothers and had made her home with them since her children had been left fatherless. Mrs. Curtis had buried two husbands, Silas Curtis, the father of Katherine, and Edmund Brown, the father of Reginald.

For over a year now Paul Pendlehaven had not left his apartments in the southern wing of the house. Many times he had told his brother, John, that he only waited with what patience he could for the call to go away, to follow after his girl-wife, and perhaps, well, perhaps his child might now be with her mother.

On the day that Uriah Devon returned from his week's bout, Doctor Pendlehaven was seated opposite his cousin, Mrs. Curtis, at dinner.

"Sarah," he began gravely, "I wish you'd consent to my taking Reginald in hand for a time. He will be absolutely ruined if something isn't done with him."

The coquettish smile which Mrs. Curtis always used in the presence of the eminent doctor left her face, and her lips drew down at the corners.

"What's he done now?" she cried.

"He isn't going to college at all," said the doctor. "He won't pass any of his examinations if he doesn't go to class and get his hours in. . . ." He paused a moment and then went on, "Another thing I dislike to speak of, but I must. Reginald has no idea of mine and thine. I'm very much afraid he takes what doesn't belong to him."

Mrs. Curtis uttered a squeal.

"Goodness gracious, you accuse him of stealing," she screamed.

"I'm afraid he does, Sarah" he answered gently. "Constantly I'm missing money and things. It will hurt you to know that some one almost stripped my wardrobe of clothes, and now I find there isn't much left for poor Paul. Paul is very much distressed! I suppose if Reginald did take them, he thought they were of no value!"

"Were they?" queried Mrs. Curtis, leaning over the table, still very angry.

"Whether they were or not, Sarah," replied Doctor Pendlehaven, ignoring his young cousin's appeal, "they didn't belong to him. And they were valuable to Paul in that they held something he prized highly. It hasn't been my habit to interfere between you and your children, Sarah, but I do wish you'd ask the boy if he did take Paul's clothes. If he's sold them, I'll pay whatever the amount is."

"How perfectly disgusting," snapped Mrs. Curtis. "If the child did sell them, thinking they were no good, you'd certainly not want them back from a second-hand shop."

Doctor Pendlehaven rose from the table.

"Ask him about the suits, Sarah," he said, walking toward the door. "Perhaps if you tell him Paul will give him a hundred dollars for them and the contents of their pockets, he'll look them up."

Mrs. Curtis rose with dignity, her damp handkerchief clenched in her hand.

"I'll not insult my only son," she said distinctly.

With a gesture of despair, Doctor Pendlehaven went out of the room.

For a moment after he'd gone, and the sound of his footsteps had been lost in the corridor, the mother stared at her daughter.

"The fact is," she burst out, "it's as Cousin John says, I haven't much influence over Reggie, but I don't believe he's as bad as people say. In a little town like this a person can't take a step sideways without old wags commenting on it. I hate Ithaca for just that reason."

Dr. John has a visitor.

Happiness Not All.

There is in man a higher than love of happiness; he can do without happiness and instead thereof find blessedness.—Carlyle.

Nervous.

It is the man of many parts who should be careful not to go to pieces.—Cartoons Magazine.

Go on and make errors and fail and get up again. Only go on.—Anna C. Brackett.

Taking No Chances.

"I noticed you loudly cheering the suffrage victory parade."

"No doubt you did," said the near-sighted gentleman. "My wife was somewhere in the line of march. As I was afraid I might not recognize her and show the enthusiasm she expected of me, I applauded continuously for an hour and a half."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Getting on His Nerves.

"Ah!" exclaimed the genial motorist, "you are having a little trouble, I see."

"Your eye is better than mine, then," growled the unhappy individual, as he crawled from under his car. "I've been poking about in this old bus for an hour looking for the trouble and I'll be gosh-blinked if I can see it!"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Heard at a Reception.

Fair Guest—That gentleman you introduced to me is a cynic.

Hostess—Indeed, my dear! And what is your idea of a cynic?

Fair Guest—He's a person who keeps you constantly in doubt whether he is unusually clever or unusually disagreeable.—San Francisco Chronicle.

His Inclination.

"The escaping steer that threw a policeman on his horns must have been something of a gambler."

"Why so?"

"He was such an adept in tossing the copper."

Mixed Colors.

"Do you enjoy literary gatherings?" asked White.

"No," replied Brown; "not being well read I feel blue in company where I realize that I am green."—Boston Transcript.

GOOD AD

"This boy you graduated is a good advertisement for you, professor."

"How so?"

"He acts like he knows everything in the world."

Epitaph.

A loving couple here repose,
Bill Jones and Mary Kissel—
They spooned, alas, while flivvering,
And didn't hear the whistle.

Belated Activity.

"The young widow says she is going to break her husband's will."

"I thought she did that the day after they were married."

Anything But—

Visitor—Ah, I see you are a disciple of Maeterlinck. A blue bird for happiness upon your new rug.

Hostess—Blue bird? My dear, that spot was put there by Willie and the ink bottle.—Judge.

Another Time.

Wifey—The police won't let that blind peddler stand on the corner any more.

Hubby—Poor man! That's the second time he's lost his site.—London Tit-Bits.

The Difference.

"I know two sisters who are in very different circumstances and yet, apparently, they married men in the same business."

"How was that?"

"One accepted an author, and the other a bookmaker."

Family Impediment.

"Hello, old man; haven't seen you here for a long time. You haven't been playing golf much lately? By the way, what is your handicap now?"

"My wife."—Spare Moments.

Well, Well.

"Sir, you have not parked your car parallel."

"Parallel? What do you mean?"

"Don't you know what I mean by parallel?"

"No."

"What is your business?"

"I'm a professor in geometry."

No News.

"The fortune teller told Ned there was a dark future before him."

"He knows that already; he's engaged to a brunette."

Handicraft for Boys and Girls

A TOY SHOCKING MACHINE.

Any amount of fun can be had with the electrical toy shown in Fig. 1.

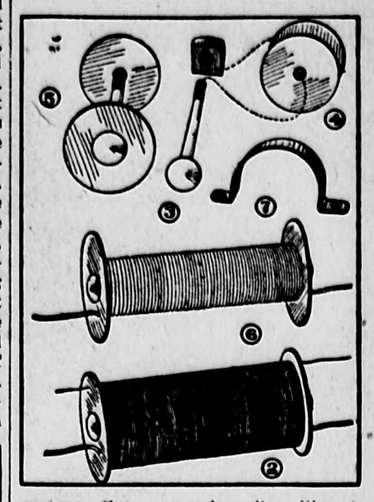

The toy consists of an induction-coil, an interrupter, a pair of grips, and a dry battery. For the induction-coil (Fig. 2), get a 5-16-inch carriage-bolt about 2½ inches in length (Fig. 3), some No. 20 or 24-gauge electric-bell insulated copper wire, and some No. 30-gauge insulated magnet wire. Cut a pair of cardboard disks 1½ inches in diameter (Fig. 4), and slip these over the bolt, one next to the bolt-head, the other next to the nut (Fig. 5); then pierce a hole through one cardboard end, stick 5 inches of one end of the coarser wire through it, and wind the wire upon the bolt, placing each turn close to the preceding turn. Three layers of this wire must be wound on from end to end of the bolt, then the wire must be pulled through the cardboard end, and cut off (Fig. 6). This forms the primary-coil. Wrap the wire with a layer of bicycle-tape or several layers of paper, then wind on eleven layers of the small wire as you did the coarse wire, using care to get it on evenly and smoothly, and run both ends through the cardboard ends (Fig. 2). This forms the secondary-coil. Mount the induction-coil upon a wooden base by means of a pair of tin straps (Fig. 7).

The two ends of the primary-coil should lead to the dry-battery, the two ends of the secondary-coil should lead to the grips (Fig. 1). Prepare four binding-post plates like that shown in Fig. 11. First fold a tin strip in half (Figs. 12 and 13); near each end punch a hole for a screw, and near the center punch a hole for a brad; then bend the strip in half lengthwise (Fig. 11). Mount each plate by driving a brad through the small hole and a screw through the larger holes. Fasten the ends of the secondary-coil and one end of the primary-coil to three of the plates. The other end of the primary-coil must be connected to an interrupter, and the interrupter connected to the fourth binding-post plate.

The interrupter makes and breaks the electrical contact; this produces the jerking, prickling sensation, or shock. Figure 1 shows a simple interrupter. Cut a wooden disk like A (Fig. 8), drive eight nails into its edge at equal distances apart, drive a ninth nail into the top surface for a handle, and bore a hole through the center for the screw pivot. Before mounting disk A, prepare the small block B (Figs. 9 and 10), cut strip C out of a piece of springy tin, bend one end over, punch a hole through it, and fasten it to one end of Block B with screw D. Screw screweye E into the opposite end of the block B so strip C will spring against it and make contact with it.

Fasten block B to the base, then mount block A in the right position so when it is revolved the nails in its edge will strike the tip end of strip C and press it away from screweye E.

NEW YEAR'S DAY GAMES.

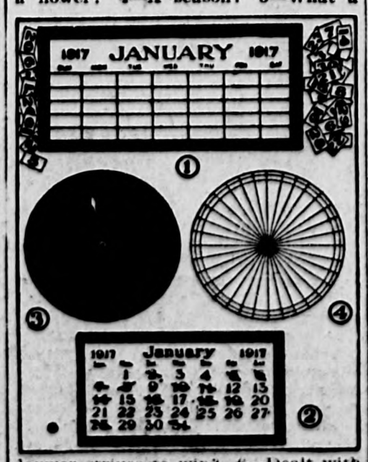

On a large sheet of wrapping paper mark the form of a calendar, with the year and month lettered across the top, and the days below. Below the lettering, rule six vertical and four horizontal lines to form 35 squares (Fig. 1). Then cut 31 paper squares of the size of the squares marked out, and number these from 1 to 31 (Fig. and number these from 1 to 31 (Fig. 2).

Give players a numbered square and pin, then, one at a time, blindfold them, and direct them to pin their number in the right square.

Place a watch upon a table, then pass paper and pencil to all and have them write down parts of the watch that will complete the following: 1—Something used before? 2—What a cry-baby makes? 3—The support of a flower? 4—A season? 5—What a lawyer strives to win? 6—Dealt with in arithmetic? 7—You have a pair of them? 8—Revolving portions of machinery? 9—Clear, transparent? 10—Adornments? Answers: 1—Second hand. 2—Face. 3—Stem. 4—Spring. 5—Case. 6—Figures. 7—Hands. 8—Wheels. 9—Crystal. 10—Jewels.

Get enough calendar leaves to provide one for each player. Then cut the month, year and day lettering from the top of each, paste upon cardboard, and beneath the lettering rule horizontal and vertical lines as shown in Fig. 1, so there will be a square for each date. Then paste each strip of dates upon cardboard, and cut into small pieces, each bearing a date.

Place the pieces face downward, in a pile, give each player a card, and direct that the dates be drawn from the pile, in turn, and arranged correctly upon the card. Each player can draw in one turn as many dates as he can draw without duplicating. The player filling his calendar first is winner.

Mount the leaves from calendars, one for each player (Fig. 2), then prepare a dial like in Fig. 3, with 31 figures around its edge, and pivot a hand from an old alarm clock at the center. Fig. 4 shows how to mark off the dial.

Place the dial in the center of a table, and have the players one at a time spin the clock hand. Then, whatever figure the hand points to, when it comes to a rest, must be crossed off with a pencil (Fig. 2). If the hand rests between figures 1 and 31, the player loses his turn. The first player to cross out all dates is winner.

If possible, get blanks from a telegraph office; if not, prepare simple ones (Fig. 1). Upon the lines provided for the message, letter F-A-T-H-E-R-T-I-M-E, leaving a space after each letter wide enough to fill a word in.

Give the blanks to the players, and ask them to write a ten-word message. In Fig. 2 is a suggestion. "Forts Attacked Three Hours Enemy Recapture Tomboy Infantry Moving Eastward."

Fig. 3 suggests how a cake may be ornamented with cardboard figures and hands, to form a clock face.

HOW TO RUN A PAPER

It is usually interesting to the uninitiated to look "behind the scenes" and note the details that in conjunction produce a general effect.

Perhaps there is no other business with which the general public is less familiar than that of the newspaper game. So many are the amusing requests, and erroneous statements in regard to the newspaper that it is assured that there are many who have peculiar ideas as to how the printed product is brought about.

In the beginning it might be said that the printing of a newspaper is a business, a real vocation by which many individuals earn their livelihood.

However public spirited the proprietors may be the paper is not owned by the community, and only in most isolated instances is a paper printed for a particular purpose, other than earning sufficient money with which to pay its expenses. If by accident a little is left over for the owner, so much the better.

Many, many persons, who would not consider for a moment going into a shop and asking the gift of a pair of shoes or a loaf of bread do nevertheless seek to get advertisements out of the newspaper without payment, though the principle is precisely the same.

However poor it may be, the newspaper is a tremendous influence in the community much more so than is generally recognized. It gives much. It gives to the churches, to the schools and to all philanthropic enterprises. It is a continuous booster in the affairs of the municipality. It is all the time "on the job" extending, to its ability, a largely unrecognized service. To be sure it may be argued that all this comes under the head of "news" and that the favor is to the newspaper. Admittedly it is a two-sided proposition, but the so-called "news" is an advertisement nevertheless for the individual, the enterprise, or the organization, about which the "news" may have been written. It is valuable in this very respect. The wise advertisers well know that the news is what win the people; and it is to get the readers that they advertise.

If one conscientiously reflects on the situation it is readily to be noted that the newspaper is a continuous booster for this, that and the other; without a penny in return, except it may be the good will of some people, and perhaps the enmity of others.

Probably there are few who do not consider that they know better how to manage a newspaper to please the public than those who are engaged at the task. In many instances, no doubt, pertinent suggestion could be made in this respect, which would be graciously received by the proprietors, if presented in the right spirit, but it is assured that the manager of the newspaper is getting out just as good a sheet as the many difficulties with which he is beset, allows. Being a matter of business it is altogether likely that the very best effort is being made; but there are reasons galore that prevent the highest attainment. The publisher views errors and peculiarities in his paper with a keener regret than can be felt by another, but he is "up against it" in many ways, known only to those who have been in the same venture. To have kept a paper even alive, through the past few years under the conflicting conditions, is to have achieved a victory, for thousands have gone under.

While the mechanical work is due for a full share of the importance in producing a newspaper; it is the reporters and news writers that come in touch with the general public; and an experienced reporter soon becomes a keen student of human nature. He learns when he is being "worked" and where there is real work which, if conscientious, he loves to exploit.

A local reporter said recently: "Sometimes I feel that I may as well throw my work into the waste basket, for all I hear about it afterward. Unless I make a mistake and perhaps spell someone's name wrongly, or it may be leave off a name from a committee, I never know if anyone has read my articles."

This is not always true, however, for frequently there are those who appreciatively express their satisfaction in what has been written and there are enough of these to oil the cogs of routine, that they do not grate too harshly.

Newspaper writing is, as a rule, a considerably unappreciated task for few persons know of the difficulties and constant interruptions under which news articles are written. So many are the distractions, and the haste in which the work must be completed, that the wonder is that the product is so good.

Criticism in regard to the composition, to the poor English employed, are frequent. In the hasty revision which the articles receive, many errors do slip by, both the writer and the editor. When in print, the one who wrote the article is its worst critic, and able to see many points of improvement.

Each special article, though, at the time of writing is but one of a dozen others that has to be finished in time for the issue. Each news story, while to the persons concerned, the all-important matter in the day's paper, is to other folk merely a casual item. Their interest is centered in some other topic, of little moment it may be to another group of individuals. This is true of all the various news of the paper. The reporter endeavoring in all things to remain neutral, tries to play up each separate topic according to its news value. He seeks to make his lead from the points which to his mind are the most likely to catch the eye of the reader and hold the attention. His success in writing lies in this very point.

All a reporter needs in writing a good story, if in the least proficient, are the main facts and perhaps a few leading details. It is his business to fit these together into something readable, and in most cases he will do better, than when limited by dictation as to how the work should be done; though this may not in all instances prove true.

Two things may be said, nowever; a news writer has no assurance, when he has written his story, that it will appear in the paper as written. He "takes a chance." Even in his choicest stories involving scrupulous attention, many times errors have occurred, making the sense ridiculous; so that his faith is weakened: he can only hope for the best.

The reporter has no jurisdiction in stating where his work shall be placed in the paper. So many people ask that some trifling item be printed on the front page. That is a matter to be arranged by those "higher up." This is usually the case also with the heads, which are not written by the one who writes the story. This is another instance where the writer "takes a chance" as to whether the head the editor sees fit to adjust will be relevant to his article or of the theme he is trying to emphasize, or if it will take away from the strength and symmetry. Many a good article has been spoiled by a poor head, and many a head has carried off a few inferior lines, so that they looked like real gold.

News writing is interesting work, with all of its difficulties, and few persons having once been in the game can resist its lure. The fascinations of composition to some are an inward urge that will be satisfied only in action. Many believe that in writing for public perusal they may be doing a good work in the world, and reaching larger number of individuals than do most of the recognized educators. The co-operation of the newspaper in educational and moral matters is rapidly being recognized by most of the thinking people of the world at large.—Lillian Parker Searle in Quincy Patriot.

BACK BAD TODAY

Backache is usually kidney-ache and makes you dull, nervous and tired. Use Doan's Kidney Pills for weak kidneys—the remedy recommended by your friends and neighbors. Ask your neighbor!

Mrs. F. Harper, Granite street, Weymouth, says: "For a long time, I was terribly troubled with my back and kidneys. I was sore and lame through the small of my back and over my hips. My back ached most of the time. My kidneys acted irregularly and annoyed me very much. I read about Doan's Kidney Pills and used them. I received excellent relief and the benefit has been permanent."

Over a year later Mrs. Harper said: "Doan's Kidney Pills are all right and it is a pleasure to again recommend them. Doan's have always given me fine relief."

Price 60c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Harper had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs, Buffalo, N. Y. 3,4

OUR BLUEJACKETS HAVE CLEAN UP WEEK EVERY FRIDAY

FIELD DAY IN NAVY

You all know what a field day means in civil life; you have heard many time of the significance of the field day in athletics, but you will learn from the lines which follow that "field day" has an entirely different meaning in the Navy. Friday is the day for general house cleaning—it is on this day that our bluejackets "turn to" and place their vessel in tip top shape for the morrow's inspection by the comanding officer. The day set aside for cleaning is known as a "field day."

In "ye olden tymes" it was customary to have the field day on Saturday, and the inspection by the Captain on Sunday. But times have changed in the Navy as they have in civil life, and just as sure as the United States Navy ranks among the greatest and most efficient in the world, and just as certain as it is the untiring aim of not only the Navy but the peoples of this great nation as well to have a Navy second to none on the face of the earth, so our bluejackets who have ever stood by their guns in the face of the most trying duty, endeavor to have the cleanest ships in the world.

But back to the field day. The ship is scrubbed with sand, it is "surry-combed" with holystones, and a brighter, cleaner spot on land or water cannot surpass a vessel of the American Navy after it has been cleaned fore and aft by our bluejackets. From truck to keelson and from bow to stern, on this day the vessel is titivated and everything is put in its place, for who can tell, the folks, the best girl or friends may call and want to look over their "home" on Sunday, or right after the Captain finishes inspection.

A ship of the capital type is no small matter to clean; it requires the help of "all hands and the ship's cook", as the saying goes. And it will be clean; it will be spotless when the lads finish and the captain inspects. In fact he usually knows that he will find a veritable palace, for "cleanliness is Godliness", in the Navy. Because of this extreme cleanliness on board many favorable comments are vouched by the visitors. A lady recently remarked while inspecting one of our large ships in the North River, New York: "One could eat one's lunch from the decks of this ship without the least hesitation." And so she could for our ships are cleaned thoroughly every day, but on Fridays, or immediately after coaling they are made almost into mirrors and shine as brightly as the sun.

TREMONT THEATRE

David Warfield is booked to appear at the Tremont Theatre, Boston, on Monday, Jan. 24, for an engagement of two weeks, in David Belasco's most noteworthy play: "The Return of Peter Grimm." The distinguished star appears under the direction of Mr. Belasco, who has supervised every detail of this revival of his dramatic masterpiece

'The Return of Peter Grimm" was first produced at the Belasco Theatre, New York, nine years ago, and after a long metropolitan run it was played throughout the country with notable success. Because of its very original and rather daring theme—namely, the continuation of individual existence after death—the play aroused wide and profound discussion; while at the same time it afforded the keenest delight to playgoers in general by reason of its fascinating story; its wealth of human appeal, and its well-nigh perfect dramaturgy.

Mr. Warfield's portrayal of the gentle old florist, Peter Grimm, who returns from the spiritual world to rectify the mistakes that he made while living, was accounted by many critics an achievement rarely if ever paralleled on the American stage.

Why He Stayed.

Lieutenant Governor Channing Cox of Massachusetts, discussing the high cost of living in France, said the other day:

"In Paris, you know, a good pair of shoes fetched $50, and a good meal about as much.

"Well, a young lawyer started on a brief vacation trip to Paris in June, and he long overstayed his time. On his return in late September a friend who knew he was none too flush, said to him:

"'Why did you remain so long in Paris, Jim?'

"'My friends kept me there,' Jim answered.

"'Your friends? Why, Jim. I didn't know you had any friends in Paris.'

"'I haven't. My friends are all in Oshkosh, and they refused to lend me any money.'"

Two and a Bridge

By ANDERSON MILLER

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The primal command to Adam to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow was certainly being applied literally in his own case, thought Robert Owen gloomily, as he regarded the moist lump that represented what had been, a few hours ago, a fresh and spotless handkerchief. The train was moving leisurely through a district in western Pennsylvania where there was not a tree, as far as he could see through the grimy windows, that was more than ten feet high.

The sun beat down on the country, and from the gray-green earth reflected heat waves leaped back, quivering and distorting the view. Owen, though clad as lightly as possible, was literally sweltering.

He thought regretfully of the cool quiet of the club lounge which he had left twenty hours before; the shaded veranda, the icy shower baths, the invigorating chill of the swimming pool.

And he had let the chief talk him into making this trip on the off chance of getting the contract for putting up a bridge over some forsaken river or other in the wilds of the state, off the main line!

He groaned as he thought that he would probably be marooned up there for the better part of a week, interviewing county commissioners and highway experts in little boxlike offices that smell of dust and were abominably hot.

He mopped his brow again, more from force of habit than with any expectation of mitigating his discomfort, and glanced out of the window at the station which the train was at that moment languidly leaving. "Philipsville," said the gilt letters. Only two more stops to Spring Valley—that, at least, was a comfort.

"I'm Going Away Tomorrow."

He would see the head of the state highway department that afternoon and try to be comfortable during the night, at least. He wondered what Spring Valley was like. For the twentieth time that day he drew the letter from the highway department from his pocket and read it, from the courteous opening to the "Yours truly, J. Harbison, Com'r."

It was a nice letter and "J. Harbison" had a nice signature—that at least was something. Harbison wasn't a smoky old fogy—he was sure of that. • • • "Spring Valley!" roared the conductor, and Owen leaped to his feet and hurried from the train, clutching his rolls of blueprints and his suitcase.

Spring Valley was not prepossessing to the eye. At the station were three dilapidated looking vehicles drawn by somnolent horses and manned by dusky Jehus who babbled unceasingly the merits of the hotels they represented.

Owen took the least objectionable of these and was transported in due time to the Mansion House. His first opinion of the Mansion House was that it wasn't. The usual languid bellboy; the usual crawling elevator; the usual room with the usual golden oak furniture, and the usual prospect of the usual travesty of a meal at 6 o'clock. He inquired the way to the state highway commissioner's offices and departed.

His inquiry for Mr. Harbison was greeted with a grin by the boy who took his card, and presently he was shown into a room that belied his preconceived ideas. It was spotlessly clean and had the air of having but recently been gone over—an air conspicuously lacking in most of the offices Owen had visited in his time. A girl was seated at a desk, writing busily. She glanced up as he entered.

"Mr. Owen?"

"Yes—to see Mr. Harbison about that bridge." Harbison had taste in secretaries, he thought. But her next words took him off his feet.

"I am Miss Harbison," the young lady replied calmly. "Won't you sit down?"

"The—the highway commissioner?" Owen could only stare.

"Of course!" With a little laugh. "I was elected last fall. You want to see me about the Bell river bridge. What is it exactly you want?"

Owen recovered from his astonishment and told her. But there were many details to go into, and it was half-past five before he knew it.

"Look here," said Miss Harbison, directly. "We have a lot to talk about. Suppose you come up to the house after dinner and we'll get on with the work. I live at 18 Cherry street—it's easy to find. About eight—good afternoon!"

Owen repaired to 18 Cherry street at the time suggested. It was a cool-looking house with a cool-looking veranda and a lot of cool-looking chairs; and Miss Harbison was there to meet him in a cool-looking frock; and he met her mother, who was a nice old lady, evidently very proud of her daughter; and for many hours the two of them set up and discussed estimates and time clauses and bonuses and penalties and such things; and at 12 o'clock Owen went back to the hotel tired but at peace with the world. He was sure that he would be able to put the contract through in fine style; and he had lost his fear of the conferences in the hot, smoky offices. Spring Valley didn't seem such a bad place after all.

For the rest of the week he was very busy putting the final details into shape, and he left for New York on Saturday with the contract in his pocket, after a very pleasant evening spent in calling, unofficially, on J. Harbison, highway commissioner. His chief congratulated him.

"I suppose you're glad to be back from that hole in the ground," he said.

"Well—to tell you the truth, chief, I was hoping you'd let me go up there again. I'd like to see the work started, at least—and I know the ground, and—and—" he finished lamely.

The chief looked at him for a moment through half-shut eyes, then laughed. "All right, Bob," he chuckled. "You're the doctor. If you want to go back there and die of the heat, go ahead. No one else wants the job."

So it was that for the next three months Mr. Robert Owen, representative of the Perfection Bridge and Construction company, found himself situated at Spring Valley, Spring county, Pennsylvania, spending as much of his time as possible in the company of Miss Joan Harbison, highway commissioner. And as the weeks slipped by and the construction got well under way, Mr. Owen found it more and more necessary to go to number 18 Cherry street for conferences.

That some of these conferences were not entirely official in character might have been shown by the fact that passersby heard, sometimes, the music of a guitar, very well played, coming from the veranda in the evenings; Mr. Owen had played on his college mandolin club, it appeared. But as the work progressed with great rapidity, there could be no possible ground for carping on the part of village critics.

One evening in early September Miss Joan Harbison and Mr. Robert Owen went out to Bell River bridge in Miss Harbison's little runabout to take a look at their completed work. Tomorrow the bridge would be opened with appropriate ceremonies; the town council and the mayor would make speeches, and there would be a band, and generally a good time would be had by all.

But in the twilight the bridge was peaceful and quiet as it gracefully spanned the stream; the two on the bank looked at it fondly and proudly. Miss Harbison with a sense of proprietorship, for the bridge would be a monument to her work as highway commissioner; Owen with an air of regarding a good piece of work. They were silent for a few moments; then Owen, stepping from the machine, invited his companion to sit beside him on a grider.

"Well, it's finished," he said after a pause.

"Yes." Miss Harbison sighed.

"What's the matter? Are you sorry it's over?"

"No—that is, yes. I mean I'm not sorry, and still—well, I am."

Thus the official, efficient highway commissioner. The highly impersonal and very businesslike Robert Owen could find nothing to say but "Are you?" which did not seem to have any direct bearing on the subject. More silence.

"I'm going away tomorrow." offered Robert after a time.

"Are you? I'm sorry!"

The words slipped out before Miss Harbison realized their import and a deep blush overspread her face. But Robert Owen, regardless of the scandalized faces of a couple of country people who happened to drive by that way at that time, impetuously caught the efficient Miss Harbison in his arms and said—a great many things with which we have no concern whatever. But they must have been satisfactory, for Miss Harbison seemed to agree with every one of them.

The country people drove on. The twilight deepened. The Bell River bridge stood contemplative, while the water beneath it flowed on, as water has been in the habit of doing the world over. But neither of the two on the girder minded the water, or the country people, or the bridge. The bridge was finished; they had just begun to live.

KEITH'S AUNT

By MILDRED WHITE

(©, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.)

I heard of Miss Abigail Persons when I went to live with Aunt Emeline's family. You see, I was left a poor relation alone in the world, and it was decided that while the question of my future career was under consideration, I should make myself useful in the home of my kinsfolk. And though Aunt Emeline kept a cook, I found many duties to occupy my time. My socially ambitious cousins, Geraldine and Inez, left me few idle hours, with their sewing and various errands.

It was understood that Geraldine must marry money, while Inez should go abroad to study art. So there was excitement in the house when it was known that Keith Persons was coming for a visit.

Keith was the nephew and heir of the rich and eccentric Miss Abigail, and Aunt Emeline and this same Abigail had been classmates at college. Through this old acquaintanceship, Aunt Emeline's daughter had been privileged to meet the good-looking and altogether desirable Keith. But the letter announcing his coming visit caused apprehension, for he was bringing his Aunt Abigail to spend two weeks with her old friend.

Never in my life have I met one so downright disagreeable as she appeared. It was impossible to be naturally pleasing before her brusque sarcasms. For Miss Abigail was aware that the eager attention bestowed upon herself was not bestowed because of affection, but in the hope only of gaining her favor where Keith was concerned.

The aggressive old lady exercised a great influence over her good natured nephew. It was remarkable how he respected her judgment. And when I mention Keith—well, I'd better not mention him too much for as I came to see him day by day in my aunt's home, listening to his kindly voice and seeing the kindly twinkles in his deep gray eyes, why it happened that I grew to think of nothing else but Keith, though you may be sure that I tried to banish the foolishness. But it would not be banished because it was love—love, the unexpected, the unreasonable. Was it not the most unreasonable thing in the world for a poor relation to set her humble little cap for a king? For surely Keith Persons was a king, with his traveled and confident ways and his assured fortune in the future. Besides, he was Geraldine's king.

Aunt Emeline had decided that. So everyone was wonderfully agreeable to Miss Abigail during her visit, and her sarcasms and unpleasant chuckles fell on deaf ears. I, alone, so forgot myself as to speak back to the old creature. As I hurried to and fro with the daintiest china for her service, she flung out to me a remark to the effect that it was quite useless for me to also gain her favor as Keith would doubtless find a wife of his own seeking. Then and there I told Miss Abigail Persons how I'd scorn money which had brought to her only suspicion of her fellow creatures.

And I kept out of Keith's way more than ever after that. Then, abruptly one day, Miss Persons went away; her nephew escorted her to her home city.

I longed to see again the humorous light that came occasionally to Abigail Persons' eyes. And when Aunt Emeline told me that they had received a letter telling of an operation which had been performed on the old lady's eyes, and how it was feared that she would lose her sight, I broke down and cried. It seemed so pitiful that she might never realize sunshine anywhere. Then came the disturbing telegram.

Keith was bringing his aunt back to be nursed in the home of her friend. When she arrived at evening, Keith half carrying her from the taxi, Miss Abigail's formerly sharp bright eyes were hidden by large brown glasses. Her sight would no doubt come back later, she told us snappishly. As Miss Abigail could not see, it was considered unnecessary to put her in the dainty guest room, so she had my small room at the end of the hall. Silken coverlets also seemed superfluous where eyes could not see colors, so Geraldine brought out the old ones. When the family was out, I would carry up the flowered china that the old lady had loved, and when she spilled things on the forbidden tray cloth, I would wash it quickly and have it ironed before Geraldine knew. Embroidered linens, Geraldine said, were not essential. And when I looked at Keith's picture in its frame on Miss Abigail's dresser, I knew that I had loved the twinkles in her eyes because they were like Keith's and I kissed his picture before I realized what I was doing. For just one moment I was glad of Miss Abigail's blindness. Then her voice aroused me, and I turned to find her folding her dark glasses away. "So," she said gently, "you do truly love my boy after all. I had to be sure. And your heart is right, too—a very important fact little girl. I have seen much during these days of pretended blindness."

"You mean——?" I asked bewilderedly.

"That it was feared I might not be able to see after the operation," Miss Abigail replied, "but that I have been able to do so perfectly. So perfectly," she continued, "that I quite approve the dictate of Keith's heart, and it went out to you completely, my dear, long ago."

PISO'S

WILLIE HOPPE IS BELIEVED TO BE VERY BEST TRAINED ATHLETE

Followers of sporting dope when asked to name the greatest living athlete probably have some trouble in settling in their own minds just who is entitled to the crown.

On past performances, Jim Thorpe would generally be accorded the laurel wreath, because the Indian has shone in football, baseball and on the track. Baseball fans might nominate "Babe" Ruth as champion athlete, and lovers of boxing doubtless would select Jack Dempsey. But closer students of all sorts of sport, if they stop and think, will give the topmost rung of the ladder of perfection to Willie Hoppe.

Some Will Object.

There will be some who will say that Hoppe isn't an athlete at all because billiards isn't an athletic game. True, it is a far cry from the delicate stroke of the cueist to the mighty swing of a Ruth or the crushing punch of a Dempsey, yet the same qualities enter into the making of each; perfect mental and physical coordination, a sense of time and rhythm. When Ruth clouts a home run he times his swing so that he will have the absolute maximum of weight and speed behind the bat when it meets the ball. He makes a perfect stroke with full power. When Hoppe hits his cue ball, he doesn't try to see how hard he can drive it, but in all other particulars, such as timing and "follow through," he does very much the same thing as the mighty "Babe."

One offers the objection, possibly, that Hoppe is hitting a stationary object, while "Babe" is forced to meet a fast-moving ball and one whose trajectory is erratic. This is offset by the fact that Ruth must simply meet the ball fairly and with force, while Hoppe must cue the ivory in such a manner that it will take english of the desired sort and with just the proper amount of force to bring it to a stop in good position for the succeeding shot.

Hoppe Makes Many.

Ruth creates a furore in the sporting world by hitting half a hundred home runs in the course of a season. Hoppe makes several times that many shots calling for the maximum of perfection in a single evening. And if Ruth does not "get hold of the ball" exactly right, he may get a base hit through the infield, or a foul ball that will give him another chance. But Hoppe, if he doesn't make his shot exactly right every time, gets nothing at all.

NEARLY KILLS LION WITH BATTED BALL

Ping Bodie once received credit for almost killing a full-grown lion with a batted ball. Longer ago than Ping likes to admit that he played baseball, he smacked one against a Los Angeles pitcher. Being on foreign ground the fans let out a roar of anguish and discontent as the ball went over the fence.

A peaceable, law-abiding lion, slumbering in his cage in the adjacent zoo, came to bat with a roar even more audible when the ball boomed against the top of the cage. The dismal moan of the beast led fans to believe Ping had killed the animal, and such was the news printed in all the Pacific coast papers the next day.

Open Game Made to Order for Such Men as Sharpe.

Old-Timer Resents Intimation That Backs of His Day Would Find Present-Day Game More Difficult in Carrying Ball.

It must be with varying emotions that the old-timer in football hears it intimated that the halfbacks of his day would find in the present-day increased and more difficult duties in ball carrying, says an Eastern writer. It may be that later-day football has increased the scope and burden of the backs, but such splendid players of the past as Benn Dibblee, Vincent Stevenson, Malcolm McBride, Frank Butterworth, Bum McClung, Everett Lake, Jim McCormick, Ted Coy, Brink Thorne, Snake Ames, Johnny Baird, Bill Heston, Osgood, Walter Eckersall, Dan Hurley, Harold Weekes, Cayou of Carlisle and others could not readily adapt themselves to the requirements of the present and become just as bright stars as they were in the old game will strike as absurd and preposterous everybody who followed football in those days.

Al Sharpe and Paul Veeder of Yale, Charles Daly, Douglas of the navy; Eckersall, Baird, Thorne, McCormick—why, they could all run and kick and the present game was made to order for them.

The Trouble.

Feel All Worn Out?

Has a cold, grip, or other infectious disease sapped your strength? Do you suffer backache, lack ambition, feel dull and depressed? Look to your kidneys! Physicians agree that kidney trouble often results from infectious disease. Too often the kidneys are neglected because the sufferer doesn't realize they have broken down under the strain of filtering disease-created poisons from the blood. If your back is bad, your kidneys act irregularly, and you feel all run down, use Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands. Ask your neighbor!

A New Hampshire Case

Will Fisk, 85 Ashland St., Manchester, N. H., says: "I suffered from cutting pains across my back and kidneys. The kidney secretions were scanty, burning in passage, highly colored, and contained sediment. I was dizzy and had such night sweats I could hardly get a wink of sleep. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and four boxes cured me."

RECEIPTS SET MARK FOR LIGHTWEIGHTS

The receipts for the Leonard-Welling bout, estimated $100,000, set a new record for the "gate" at lightweight bouts. The previous high mark was $69,715, taken in at the Gans-Nelson bout at Goldfield in 1908. The third largest receipts, $58,311, were recorded at the Nelson-Britt affair, in Colma, in 1904.

HOOPER REMAINS CAPTAIN

The statement that the field captaincy was at his call was made in reply to a report that the veteran outfielder was to be traded to the Chicago White Sox or New York Yankees.

A probable candidate for unlimited weight honors is Clyde King, right tackle of the eleven and stroke of the Academy's Olympic crew. Mirron, last year's champion in the heavyweight class, will go to the light heavy division.

Indoor football was inaugurated at Philadelphia with a game between elevens of the second city troop and a local athletic association. "Why did you do that?" cried the victim.

"To let you realize what a bargain you have got," the other said.

WEYMOUTH, JANUARY 21, 1921

EDITORIAL

Commissioner Bates advanced some very good reasons at the banquet of the Men's Club of Clapp Memorial Association why the county penal institutions should be transferred to State control. For the good of the prisoners themselves, and for economy leaves little to be said in opposition to the suggestion of Gov. Cox in his Inaugural Address, yet it will become one of the big questions of the year on Beacon Hill. The Norfolk county and Plymouth county jails as now conducted cost the taxpayers more than they should.

The report of the Department of Agriculture again reminds us that Massachusetts is not much of a farming state, ranking No. 38 in value of crops in 1920. The order is Texas, Iowa, Illinois, California and New York.

Those who count on winter being most over, need to be reminded that the big storm of last winter came early in February. Did not suppose anyone would ever forget that.

Now Congress is talking an "emergency" tarriff bill that will probably increase the price of flour, sugar, and other articles.

NO DROP IN PAPER

The price toboggan is working in every part of the world and in a very large share of the articles forming international trade. Of the 75 principal articles of our import trade, for which the average import price is stated by the official records of the Government all but four, says a statement by the National City Bank of New York, are lower in the November, 1920, import record than in earlier months of the year 1920. The articles in the official list which "refuse to come down" are newsprint paper, wood pulp, pulp wood and bananas.

BRADLEY LEAGUE

In the Bradley bowling league Jan. 13 the team of Capt. Leary won three points out of four from the team of Capt. Crouse, the totals being:

Leary	404	435	414	1253
Crouse	419	417	404	1240

The team of Capt. Donovan won from Capt. McLeod by a similar score, the totals were:

Donovan	413	405	412	1230
McLeod	400	389	429	1218

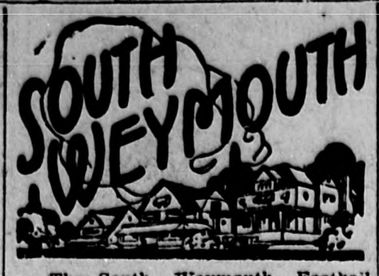

The Leary team led on totals by only 13 pins, and the Donovan team was only 12 pins ahead of the McLeods.

GLOBE THEATRE

To study the eccentricities of the amusement-seeking public from the managerial standpoint must be highly interesting from its very uncertainty. I do not believe the various purveyors of entertainment give much thought to the matter, but go at it blindly, relying on the fame of the author and the reputation of the different players more than their own judgment of the piece itself. I am told that "It's Up to You", which is now filling the Globe Theatre, Boston, at every performance, was put out with some trepidation, and, to insure success, several names were given out as being members of the organization.

This was all done in good faith, but a trial demonstrated that the people in question were not quite the right ones, and at the last moment others were substituted. The comedy came sneaking into Boston Jan. 7, and on the opening night would-be patrons were turned away unable to secure seats. On Tuesday evening there was a crowd of anxious people in line from the main entrance of the Globe Theater far down Washington street. The next night, in a pelting rain, the same conditions existed, and it has been so ever since. Verily the theatrical game is like a Chinese puzzle.

Eggs a plenty when the Mercury's Down!

It is the way you are feeding and not so much the season that is responsible for the eggs you are getting. If you will feed for eggs now, you will get eggs now.

Grains furnish too much material to make yolks, but less than enough for an equal number of whites. Hens can't lay incomplete eggs.

To Make More Eggs

Purina Chows are rich in protein, the principal element in whites. Just enough, and no more, of each element is used to keep a perfect balance of whites and yolks. Maximum egg production is the result.

There were three charges against Chester Binney, one for operating an auto on the highways while under the influence of liquor, second with breaking and entering the supposed hen coop of Charles Hollis, and third, for larceny of auto.

The renowned lawyer, Gray Stevens was secured as the prosecuting attorney, and Howard M. Clark, Esq., appeared for the defense. Among the witnesses summoned for the government were Frank Bryant, R. L. Stone and Charles Hollis; and for the defence, William Moore. Victor King and Mr. Binney himself.

The jury were prompt to find the defendant guilty on all three counts and he was sentenced to attend church at every regular meeting for the next three months and not fall asleep.

The Ladies Community Sisterhood held a food sale and found ready purchasers for all their goods. About $60 was netted from the entertainment and sale.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Congress Decides an Army of 175,000 Is Enough, Despite "Yellow Peril."

HOUSE DECLINES TO GROW

Apportionment Measure Leaves Membership at 435 — Harding Goes to Florida Without Announcing Cabinet — Briand Becomes Premier of France and Reparations Conference Opens.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

Congress took action on two important and interesting matters last week. One of these related to the national defense. The senate, which had voted for reduction of the strength of the army to 150,000 men, reconsidered its vote and repassed the New resolution directing the secretary of war to suspend enlistments until a reduction to 175,000 men was accomplished. The house promptly passed a similar resolution almost unanimously, and the measure went to the President. It was expected, in view of the opposition of the war department, that Mr. Wilson would veto it, and that congress would pass it over the veto.

This is supposed to be a measure of economy which will save about forty million dollars a year to the government. The senate was restrained from being even more economical only by representations from Secretary of War Baker that the 150,000 limit would upset the department's plans for army organization, and from General Pershing that 200,000 men was the bottom limit of safety. Of course the senators in this connection debated the "yellow peril." Phelan of California asserted the necessity for large garrisons in Pacific possessions was greater now than during the war, while Reed and Williams ridiculed the danger and said Japan never would dare to attack the United States without the assistance of Great Britain.

It is likely that the latter view is that generally held in America, except by the people of the Pacific coast, to whom the Japanese peril looms large. It accords, also, with the expert opinion of the German Admiral Scheer, who says it would be almost impossible for Japan to land an army on American soil. Some people have grown excited over the murder of an American navy lieutenant by a Japanese sentry in Vladivostok. There is no doubt that this affair will be settled diplomatically, though the sharp note from Washington, virtually questioning Japan's right in the Siberian city, may result in an acrid exchange. The arbitrary actions of the Japanese authorities in Vladivostok, which they hold under military rule, have caused a good deal of irritation—but the government in Tokyo is too smooth to permit them to lead to hostilities with the United States.

The other interesting congressional action was taken by the house on Wednesday, when it decided by a vote of 267 to 76, that during the next ten years it shall be composed of the same number of representatives as now—435. The plan of apportionment adopted provides that eight states shall gain in representation and eleven lose. California gets three more members, Ohio and Michigan two more each, and New Jersey, Connecticut, North Carolina, Texas and Washington one each. The losers are Missouri, two; and Iowa, Indiana, Kentucky, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, Rhode Island and Vermont, one each.

Because the population has been drifting from the farm to the city, the agricultural constituencies of the West and South are the ones that suffer most in loss of representation. The congressmen from those regions were the chief opponents of the measure, and their main argument was that the census, being taken during the war period when the young men of the country had been drafted or attracted to the cities by high wages, was unfair. They contended that a new census, taken after readjustment was complete, would show that the farming states had recovered their lost population.

Always, when reapportionment is in order, the South fears that it will suffer through application of the constitutional provision which authorizes the house to reduce representation from any state that denies or abridges the right to citizens of the United States to vote. This time Tinkham of Massachusetts sought to have the provision written into the bill, asserting that several southern states denied their negro citizens the right of suffrage. But nothing came of it and the South breathed easier.

Mr. Harding has departed for Florida without making public his cabinet selections, but before leaving Marion he said he might be able to announce the personnel of his official family after settling down in St. Augustine next month. He declined to discuss the attempt of certain senators and others to induce him to substitute Elihu Root for Charles E. Hughes as secretary of state, and indeed he never has said that he had chosen Mr. Hughes for that place, though it is taken for granted by some of the correspondents. One rumor Mr. Harding did dispose of—that there would be a Democrat in his cabinet. He said the members would all be Republicans, but would not be selected solely because of party obligations. Fred Upham, treasurer of the Republican national committee, is responsible for the statement that one and possibly two members of the cabinet will be from the South.

The Republican majority in the senate has decided that no more of President Wilson's army and navy appointments shall be confirmed, with the exception of some 5,000 minor officers commissioned under the army reorganization act. The appointments of eleven major generals and of hundreds of high army and navy officials in bureaus and departments will not be acted on. They will be left for the Harding administration to handle.

Congressional committees are after A. Mitchell Palmer, with the purpose of at least giving him an unpleasant quarter of an hour. Last week the attorney general was called before the senate judiciary subcommittee to reply to charges of illegal and unauthorized practices by the Department of Justice in its activities against the Reds. Ostensibly, Mr. Palmer was summoned merely to express his opinion of Senator France's resolution for a general amnesty for political prisoners. He opposed the resolution because, he said, the government was already doing all it could in this line; he favored the repeal of the espionage act, but said there should be permanent legislation to protect the government from violent radicals. The France resolution strongly condemns the practices of the department of justice, and in reply Mr. Palmer made sweeping denials of the charges and produced reports of his agents to prove them unfounded.

Samuel Untermyer recently accused the attorney general of malfeasance. In an interview Mr. Palmer said he did not know "how far Mr. Untermyer is actuated in his present attack by the recent conviction of his friend and former associate, a member of the New York bar, for conspiracy to violate the trading with the enemy act, in a case in which Mr. Untermyer very earnestly pressed me to withhold action at the beginning."

Mr. Palmer says that Untermyer was opposed to taking over enemy property and once threatened him when, as alien property custodian, he declined to yield to the lawyer's requests.

Aristide Briand has been made premier of France, has named a strong cabinet and has been assured of the support of all parties except the Radicals, giving him a majority of about 400 in the chamber. He has himself taken the portfolio of foreign affairs, and on Thursday he read to parliament the cabinet's declaration of policy.

This paved the way for the conference of the allied premiers, in session this week in Paris. The subjects under discussion are reparations and disarmament of Germany, Austria and Turkey, and the affairs of Greece. The matter of reparations is the most serious, and it was expected Lloyd George and Briand would find difficulty in reaching an accord on it. A story from Berlin that the British and French had arrived at a new basis for negotiating the reparations question, was denied by British officials, who said the "lump sum" policy remained in force, though a plan for five-year annual payments is being discussed. There is no likelihood that any of the pleas of Germany will be granted.

The official German report on the carrying out of the terms of the Versailles treaty has been completed, and asserts that the total value of the property so far turned over to the entente is $5,000,000,000. By far the largest single item is the merchant fleet of more than 4,500,000 tons, valued at $2,000,000,000.

Though the story has not yet been confirmed from any source, mention must be made of the report from Berlin by way of Paris that the Dutch government has asked the members of the former kaiser's family to leave Holland. The government is said to have come into possession of documents proving that the Hohenzollerns were preparing for a coup d'etat for their restoration. The former crown prince, it was discovered, was to pass into Germany and enter Berlin at the head of troops that have remained faithful to the Hohenzollern dynasty. The Berlin correspondent of the London Times says a Prussian royalist party has been formed and plans to bring the "Orgesch" into line with similar movements in other German states. These stories are in accord with others that have appeared recently giving in great detail the plans for the restoration of the empire under Wilhelm or one of his sons. Ludendorff is said to be the actual head of the general movement.

There is no rift in the black clouds that overhang Austria. The Austrian section of the reparations committee, which expects to report to the allied premiers this week, are said to argue that the situation must be remedied by stringent measures to bring about the free interchange of products between Czecho-Slovakia, Roumania, Austria and Hungary, or Austria is doomed to starve, unless the world is willing to continue to feed it through charity.

The workers of Austria, who demand the stopping of profiteering, also demand a plebiscite on the question of fusion with Germany—which the peace treaty forbids. Finance Minister Grim in a speech last week declared that union with Germany would be brought about of necessity, perhaps by means of a revolution, unless foreign credits to Austria were soon forthcoming.

Bishop Cohalan of Cork takes a pessimistic view of the Irish situation, saying he sees no prospect of peace. Nor is there any so long as the Irish persist in their demand for independence and so long as the present British government lives. The British authorities are making this plain in every way possible. Not a day passes without raids in Ireland in which militant republicans are captured and arms seized, and on Thursday a number of Sinn Fein centers in London were raided. Ambushing and slaying of officers by the Irish also continues, and now the government is making official the reprisals hitherto only condoned. In Cork two houses where members of the constabulary were attacked were destroyed by the military forces. The British military authorities in Dublin have issued a proclamation declaring that if bomb and firearm attacks on crown forces in motorcars do not cease, "known rebels will be carried as hostages for the safe conduct of the occupants of all motor vehicles which are the property of the armed forces of the crown."

Lord Mayor O'Callaghan of Cork, who came to America as a stowaway, and whose deportation was decided on by the State department, despite the opposition of the Labor department, intends to carry the case to the Supreme court if possible. Meanwhile he has told his story to the unofficial committee on Irish affairs. Another witness heard last week calls himself the "consul general of the Irish republic," and the self-constituted committee of meddlers carefully so addressed him by that title.

VITAL STEERING SYSTEM OF AUTO

Proper Lubrication at All Times One of Most Important Cares of Owner.

INSPECT GEARS FREQUENTLY

Faults That Lead to All Kinds of Troubles Explained and Means Outlined for Preventing Them—Gears Always Working.

The vital steering system of the automobile is about as popular with the motorist as the traffic cop. A system so important as the steering should be well understood and well cared for. The fundamentals are easy to understand. In practically all cars there is the same fundamental design, consisting of a steering wheel, which operates a post at the bottom of which are reduction gears. One of the gears is turned directly by the wheel, the other, being in mesh with the post gear, also turns. This second gear operates a so-called steering arm to which the drag link is fastened.

The drag link connects with one front wheel through a knuckle arm and to the other front wheel through the tie rod and another steering arm.

It is clear to see that in this system there are numerous joints and other rubbing or moving surfaces, and every one of them must be constantly lubricated.

Gears Always in Action.

To the driver the steering system appears to be at rest except when the car is turned around, but actually the joints and gears are always doing some work, always rubbing, even though it be a little. The gears must always be covered with grease or graphite.

Usually there is a case which houses these gears, but sometimes they are exposed. Once every three months these gears should be inspected and the housing replaced.

The same applies to the ball joints at the drag link ends and to the tie rod joints.

If this is not done parts will get dry and rust and steering begins to be difficult. You must turn the front wheels by first overcoming the friction of the rusty parts.

In time those rusty parts break. One of the commonest causes of hard steering is due to a stiff steering knuckle. The steering knuckle is part of the front axle that moves and permits the wheels to be turned.

There are two knuckles and they must move very freely.

It is necessary to lubricate the knuckle or so-called kingpins every day. Grease is effective if sufficient pressure is used to force it to the rubbing surface, otherwise oil should be employed. If you have ordinary grease cups and wish to make sure the pins will get lubrication, substitute large oil cups.

All Show Play in System.

Every car shows a certain amount of play in the steering system, that is the steering wheel can be turned a little before the front wheels move. There should be some play but not as much as the average car has.

Play develops naturally, due to wear of all parts, but it also develops more rapidly because owners have a habit of turning the wheel when the car is standing. This puts an added strain on the rubbing parts of the steering system, and wear is more rapid.

When wear does occur it should be compensated for by adjustment at the right place. Sometimes the ball joints are badly worn, again it may be the knuckle pins or the tie-rod connections, or the gears in the post. Do not adjust the gears in the post when the ball joints or other parts are at fault.

Find out where the play exists by feeling the various parts separately and pulling and pushing them. A little play in all is likely to develop quite a bit of play at the wheel because of the gearing.

ELIMINATING DANGER FROM EXHAUST GASES

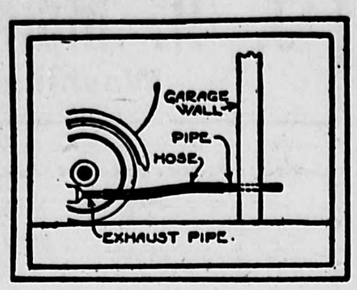

Simple Method Illustrated for Carrying Away Fumes

Five Minutes in Small Unventilated Garage With Door Shut and Engine Working Means Another Job for Undertaker.

When Nat Willis, the noted actor, was found lying beneath his car, dead, and it was found that his death had resulted from inhaling the exhaust gases of an automobile, the motoring public began to take precautions against this menace.

If one should remain for five minutes in a small unventilated garage, with the door shut and fumes pouring from the car's exhaust he would be beyond the doctor's aid.

If you must work on the car with the engine running attach a hose to the exhaust and run the hose into a pipe that communicates with the outer air. In this way you get rid of those deadly fumes and eliminate the danger of being suffocated by them.

The Hose Carries the Deadly Fumes to the Outside Air and Keeps the Garage Air Pure.

It is very simple to arrange so that this can be done. A hole is made in the wall of the garage, in a convenient position to the rear of the car, and piece of gas-pipe inserted. This pipe should be of sufficient length to protrude about 6 or 8 inches on each side of the wall and, if the wall is wood, duly insulated. Connection is made with a hose.—E. T. Ofeldt in Popular Science Monthly.

KEEP WINDSHIELD CLEAN

Many winter motorists have found that a simple way to keep the windshield clean when the first melting flakes of snow are flying is to apply a mixture of glycerin, salt and water. The glass should first be thoroughly washed and dried, then the mixture is applied with a cloth rubbed in straight lines. Twice as much glycerin as water and a liberal sprinkle of salt will be found efficacious.

VERDIGRIS FORMS ON BRASS

It May Be Removed by Use of Good Metal Polish, Leaving a Clean Smooth Surface.

The verdigris that forms on brass may be removed by the following treatment: Mix a good metal polish in equal parts with wood alcohol. Apply with a brush and allow to dry. When dry rub with a clean cloth and the verdigris will come off too, leaving a clean smooth surface. After this the brass may be polished in the usual way.

BE CAREFUL OF SPEEDOMETER

Spinning or Sliding of Rear Wheels Is Liable to Spring or Otherwise Injure Shaft.

When the car has a transmission driven speedometer the rear wheels should never be spun or permitted to slide. This habit is likely to spring or break the speedometer shaft, sometimes causing an error in speedometer reading of anywhere from 2 to 5 per cent.

Edward H. Kittredge, advertising manager of the Old Colony Trust Company, Boston, in an address before the Pilgrim Publicity Association declared that the ignorance of New Englanders about the great industrial achievements of modern New England was responsible for the widespread feeling that this section is a repository of historical remains instead of a mighty centre of commerce and industry, as it really is.

It is announced in insurance circles Hartford, Conn., that increased rates in automobile liability insurance will be put into effect in the near future by all of the large companies carrying this line. The rates, it is expected, will be higher in the large cities than in the smaller ones, and higher in smaller cities than in rural districts—the rate on privately owned cars, in the rural districts remaining practically undisturbed for collision insurance and property damage. Death rates from accidents, and the losses from property damage have been found to be greatest in congested districts.

TWO CHURCH DESIGNATIONS.

The word "protestant" includes many churches, the Protestant Episcopal and the Methodist Episcopal among them. The word "protestant" came into use at the time of the Reformation both in England and on the continent. It stood for a protest against the Roman Catholic church. The name is not particularly significant at this time when all of the churches are drawing closer together. —Brooklyn Eagle.

AHEAD OF ENGAGEMENTS.

Mary, who is the baby sister of girls in college, looks forward with delight to their week-end visits home and devotes herself entirely to them at such times. Recently, her sister noticed that as Mary knelt to say her little prayer she hurried through it, then began again and so on until she had repeated it almost breathlessly four times. Finally, she arose and exclaimed: "Now, I am prayed up for four nights and we can visit."

His Reason.

Speaking of politics and elections, we knew a man once who announced that he would vote for a certain candidate for office. When asked for his reason, he replied that the candidate was his friend. And when they asked him if he had no other reasons he said no; he said he didn't need any other reason. We have liked this man ever since.

When Spiders Retreat.

Spiders hide themselves in threatening weather. This is because they know insects do not fly about in the damp atmosphere preceding rain, and not because they lack umbrellas.

Extraordinary Hurdling.

William Priestly, at Hull, England, in 1863, jumped one thousand hurdles, each three feet six inches high, in sixty-one and a half minutes. That is equal to lifting his own weight nine times the height of St. Paul's, in London, and running six miles into the bargain.

Better Than Compressed Air.

A scheme has been introduced into England by which power is transmitted through impulses in a column of water. For certain classes of work it is said to be very desirable and the transmission is more economically made than with the use of air.

Baker, Mrs. Elizabeth B. Wood of East Braintree and Charles H. Lorke of South Weymouth are also officers. The court was instituted by Deputy Supreme Royal Matron of Massachusetts, Mrs. Katherine Faxon, assisted by George Shackford as Royal Patron. The work was exemplified by the officers of Roosevelt court of Dorchester, Mrs. Celia Sillew, Royal Matron, and John T. McClintock Royal Patron. Sir Knight Guy Ham delivered an address on the history of the Order of Amaranth. The new court starts with 122 charter members. A banquet preceded the institution.

MONDAY CLUB

On Friday at Mrs. Bosworth's in East Weymouth there was a meeting of the Civics Class addressed by Dr. Mary R. Lakeman on the subject of "Public Health."

She told of what is being done by the State for those who are ill with contagious diseases, the necessity for cleanliness in child care, and the wisdom of the "no kissing" rule for litte ones. She spoke of the absolute necessity of the Sheppard-Towner bill to save lives of mothers and little ones.

The next and last meeting of the season will be at the home of Mrs. Albert Gladwin, Bridge street, North Weymouth, on Feb. 4. It is hoped Miss Ethel Johnson will be present to talk on the subject of what the State is doing for women in industry.

The whist party at the home of Mrs. G. W. Perry, East Weymouth, was an all around success, giving both pleasure and profit. The auction bridge favors went to Mrs. M. Louis Denbroeder, Mrs. James B. Jones, and Miss Louise Bond; the whist favors to Mrs. George Pratt, Mrs. Insley I Young, and Mrs. Arthur Bryant. Mrs. E. P. Hunt cared for the candy and saw to its disposal.

The next meeting of the club will be on Feb. 7 and a treat is promised as the entertainment is to be furnished by Miss Muriel Bianchard, soprano, Carl Webster, 'ceilist, and J. A. Baumgartner, pianist. This will be an open meeting so all may enjoy the music.

The AMERICAN LEGION

ARIZONA CITIZENS ERECT LEGION HOSPITAL IN RECORD TIME

A SPECTACLE believed to be almost unique in American history and one that has given tremendous impetus to the nation-wide fight of the American Legion to obtain at least simple justice for sick and disabled heroes of the World war, was staged in the thriving little desert city of Tucson, Ariz., recently.

Led by Gov. Thomas E. Campbell and national, state and local representatives of the Legion, the entire citizenry of the community brought every business activity to a standstill for a day while more than 5,000 men and women in overalls or other appropriate working garb, drove their automobiles to Pastime park, three miles north of the town, and labored with their hands to expedite construction of an emergency public health service hospital for tubercular ex-service men.

Governor Campbell, E. J. Winslett, national vice commander of the Legion; State Commander Bert H. Clingan, Mayor O. C. Parker and hundreds of other prominent business and professional men of the city and state appeared in real working clothes and manipulated shovels, picks, hammers, saws and wheelbarrows in the greatest frenzy of activity the community had ever known. The immediate result was that the emergency institution which government engineers originally had estimated it would take three months to build, was brought to virtual completion within one week, and more than 500 tubercular derelicts of the war who had been unhospitalized and partly shelterless, suddenly found themselves with a roof over their heads

The whole demonstration was planned and carried out within a little more than 48 hours, while Governor Campbell and State Legion Commander Clingan made flying trips from Phoenix to address a mass meeting under legion auspices at the armory on the evening preceding the park event, and to participate in the "heavy work" there next day. The chief executive of the commonwealth pushed a wheelbarrow full of rocks, drove an ex-army truck and wound up his strenuous afternoon with an impassioned plea to Tucsonians and all good Americans to get together and stand squarely behind the legion in "the most important movement now starting here for the benefit of disabled ex-service men that has yet begun in the United States."

At the conclusion of his address, the overalls the governor had worn during the afternoon, and which figured conspicuously in several hundred feet of "movie" film unwound by a Pathe News camera man, were auctioned off to the highest bidder, the Morgan McDermott post of the legion at Tucson. Approximately $200 for the benefit of a welfare fund for patients at the hospital was realized from the auction, each bidder being obliged to hand over the sum offered, irrespective of whether it was high enough to get the clothes. The bid of the Legion Post was $70.

The attention of F. W. Galbraith, Jr., the legion's national commander, was first attracted to the Tucson situation after H. D. MacArtan, the public health service physician in charge of the hospital, had gone to Washington and reported that more than half of the 128 patients then in the institution were sleeping in condemned army tents, and that there were approximately 450 other tubercular ex-service men entirely unhospitalized in the community as a result of the congestion which followed the usual influx of "white plague" victims at this season of the year. These 450 men in dire need of the care and treatment they were not receiving, were distributed through the community with such limited housing facilities and shelter from the extreme cold of the desert nights as their weary wanderings happened to bring them.

Commander Galbraith sent E. J. Winslett, national vice commander of the legion, and a representative of the American Legion News Service to Tucson to see what could be done to remedy the situation. Their instructions were to do all possible to speed up construction work, co-ordinate the efforts of all community interests and visualize the local situation as an object lesson to thrust "under the nose of congress" in the legion's national fight for justice for the nation's heroes of two years ago and the legion's comrades then, now and always.

Governor Campbell was in the East at the time and assisted Dr. MacArtan in inducing Director Chomely Jones of the bureau of war risk insurance and other government officials to bring about the cutting of a vast amount of red tape. Dr. MacArtan finally returned to Tucson with authorization to spend approximately $300,000 for the erection of an emergency hospital, and he brought with him George E. Kirk, a federal engineer to whom with his assistants much of the credit for the record-breaking completion of the project is due. Governor Campbell placed state workmen, materials, trucks and tools at the disposal of the government and there was from the beginning a hearty and enthusiastic co-operation on the part of the business and professional men of Tucson, as well as the citizens generally.

Arriving at Tucson, Mr. Winslett surveyed the situation and then called a conference of legionnaires and state and municipal public officials and business men.

At the conference he told of the legion's nation-wide fight, just beginning, to obtain justice for the derelicts coming back from the war and appealed to all organizations and agencies to make a united stand for a square deal for those who offered their all to their country in time of need and have become victims of neglect, inefficiency, red tape and dereliction of duty as their reward.

The following evening a mass meeting was held in the Tucson armory, with Governor Campbell, National Vice Commander Winslett, State Commander Clingan and James R. Dunseath, a prominent Tucson lawyer and business man, as the principal speakers. An informal dance under the auspices of the legion post followed the meeting and Governor and Mrs. Campbell led the grand march.

The following day was proclaimed a holiday by Mayor Parker and every store, factory and business establishment of every description closed its doors.

Women and girls of the community took an active part in the demonstration, and members of various women's clubs and civic organizations entered whole-heartedly into the spirit of the event and backed it one hundred per cent.

In every sense, it was a red letter day in the history of Tucson, Arizona, and America, and an exemplification of the unity and unselfish co-operation which animated the whole nation during the war and which rarely, if ever, has been so conspicuously displayed in this country since the signing of the armistice.

POULTRY CACKLES

GRAINS FOR POULTRY FLOCK

Corn and Wheat Are Best and About Equal in Feeding Value—Scratch Mixture Is Good.

Corn, wheat, oats, and barley are the principal grains fed to poultry; kafir corn and buckwheat are used also, but are not so generally available and usually cost more. Corn and wheat are the two best grains and are about equal in value as poultry feeds, although wheat can be fed alone better than corn, which is inclined to be fattening. Oats and barley, on account of their hulls and higher fiber content, are not so good as corn or wheat. Rye is not well relished by fowls and is seldom fed. Wheat screenings or slightly damaged grains sometimes may be bought to advantage, their value depending entirely upon their quality and condition, but as a rule only sound grains in good condition should be fed to poultry, and moldy grains should never be used. The locally grown grains, which poultry will eat freely, may generally be used to the best advantage, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. A scratch mixture, consisting of whole or cracked grains, made of a combination of any two or more of those mentioned, can be fed to advantage. It is not advisable to feed continuously any single grain, especially corn.

A mash made of ground grains, mill products, and meat scrap should be fed usually in addition to the scratch mixture. Cornmeal, wheat bran, wheat middlings, and meat scrap form the basis of a good mash, while corn chop, corn-and-cob meal, ground oats, and low-grade flour may be added or substituted to advantage. Just as good results can be obtained from a simple mash, containing three or four ground grains and meat scrap, as from a highly complicated mash, containing ten or twelve products.

A large number of commercial mixtures, both of scratch grains and of ground grains, are prepared for poultry feeds, but the value of mixed commercial feed depends upon the composition and the quality of the grains used in its preparation. If a poultry raiser does not produce any grain and keeps a comparatively small number of fowls, it is often better for him to buy commercial mixed feeds. The average farmer, however, should feed home-grown grains, supplemented with mill feeds and meat scrap, and the large poultryman usually can mix his own feeds to best advantage. When two or three kinds of grain are raised, and ground or mill feeds are not readily available, good results can be obtained by feeding only the grains, provided they are supplemented with meat scrap or milk.

GRAIN RATION FOR PIGEONS

Good Mixture May Be Made by Using Corn, Wheat, Peas and Vetch—Peanuts Are Good.

Many varieties of grains are used in feeding pigeons. A good mixture may be made of equal parts by weight of small whole corn, hard, dry wheat, peas and vetch, with a small quantity (about five per cent each) of hemp and millet seeds added during the molting period.

Other grains which may be substituted for or added to these are peanuts, dried garden peas, cowpeas, clipped oats or hulled oats, buckwheat, kgyptian corn, and milo maize, while a small quantity of stale bread, rice, rape, millet, canary or sunflower seed may be fed for variety.

Peas are expensive, but seem to be essential to the best results, especially during the breeding season. Peanuts, cowpeas and dried garden peas give quite good results and sometimes are used in place of field peas when the latter are high in price. Soy beans do not seem to be so well liked by pigeons.

Tender green feed, such as freshly cut clover, alfalfa and chard, lettuce, plantain leaves and chickweed may be fed, but is not essential.

OPPORTUNITY FOR FEW HENS

Whether They Prove Profitable or Not in Back Yard Depends on Care Given by Owner.

The smallest back yard affords an opportunity to keep a few hens. Whether the occupant of the premises can keep those few hens to advantage depends upon whether he or she can and will give them the necessary care.

PROPER TEST OF PROGRESS

Many Things Good Citizens Will Put Above the Numerical Growth of Their Community.

Greater New York is peeved because it has been credited with some 400,000 fewer people than it believes lives within its boundaries, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. It has enough to lead London and thus be classed as the largest metropolis of the world, and if pride in nothing but the number of people who manage to exist within the official limits of the city is the ruling spirit, New York ought to be satisfied with credit for having the largest number. But it is not satisfied and is making a count of its own. The census figures show an actual decline in the borough of Manhattan, which fact ought to envoke expressions of satisfaction instead of the reverse. If some of the crowded masses of lower Manhattan have been able to find homes outside that district, thus reducing the congestion and making living more comfortable for those who are compelled to remain, it should be a matter of general congratulation.

Why is a census taken? Is it so that we may know exactly how many people there are in the United States and that municipal rivalries based entirely upon the number of human beings who live within the official boundaries may be determined? That is all a great many people see in it. Newspaper comment on figures given out is purely numerical. Perhaps that is because we have only numerical data as yet. Far more worth consideration will be the facts as to the conditions of life, the social and religious status, the matter of employment, housing, etc., etc. Any city genuinely interested in its actual growth and conditions will pay more attention to such data than to the mere matter of numbers.

HOLD SECURITIES AT HOME

Manifest Advantages Are to Be Obtained by Wise Investment in Local Industries.

One of the generating plants in California decided to offer its stock to its customers, instead of sending it to New York for needed funds. Its success was immediate, says the Society for Electrical Development. Employees of the company were the first to buy. This expressed their confidence in the safety of their company, based on intimate knowledge of its workings. The public eagerly followed. Today upward of $40,000,000 worth of central station securities are owned by 36,000 individuals, 90 per cent of whom heretofore never owned a utility stock. The growing popularity of customer partnership in public utilities in lieu of the much-discussed municipal ownership and its uncertainties may be the herald of a day when the American people, like their thrifty neighbors of France, will be partners in all their home utilities. Certainly there is value in having one's savings employed where they can be watched and there is patriotism and hard business sense, too, in helping to increase earnings on the investment by one's personal interest in the industrial progress of the home town.

Town Planning.

The familiar rush of the people from the land to the cities, so pronounced a feature of modern times, has encouraged congestion in most communities. Recourse to town planning has been forced by the necessities of efficient transportation and sound land values, as well as good health.

It is fashionable today to deplore the slums. Why provide new ones? Why add congestion to existing congestion, when, simply by looking ahead and taking thought, healthy growth may be assured?

Town planning provides the city with eyes to see where it is spreading and to conform to the demands of business and comfort. A city unplanned is a blind giant, sprawling over the ground. It wastes some of its greatest assets in a building debauch.

Every city that keeps order on its streets must also keep order in its advance to greater size and influence. It must put town planning traffic experts at important corners on its way.—Montreal Star.

Louisville Sets Good Example.

Along the outskirts of Louisville, on the main highroads, "representatives" of the Louisville Automobile club are always on duty, day and night, extending welcome to the incoming traveler, and good wishes to those departing.

The representatives are inanimate, being made of wood and paint, but they have given good service to countless motorists.

On one side of the signs, facing persons coming into Louisville, is the word "welcome," with a summary of the more important city traffic regulations. On the opposite side is "good-by," and the distances to other towns along the road.

According to Eugene Stuart, secretary of the club, the signs are but one of the means taken by Louisville motorists to make the city remembered gratefully by visiting tourists.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

INVITING SPRING SUITS ARRIVE

NEW suits for spring have made their entry in a bevy of models that includes familiar styles, and others ingeniously designed and less familiar. A few of these new things will prove short-lived experiments, but there are several good novel styles with a promising future. There are more short coats than long ones among the new arrivals—short coats being springlike and youthful—and there are short capes and coats to be worn with one-piece frocks or skirts and blouses that are unusually good looking. These coats are much like the Chinese model, but with more flare to the body, suggestive of a cape, and there is every reason to predict that they will become a fashion.

The dignified long coat and the sensible three-quarter length are always serenely sure of a following, and therefore they are well represented in the new [illegible] he shorter of these outstanding other styles. A handsome model in the first of these two classes is shown at the left of the two spring suits pictured and it can be recommended to the older women more particularly, just as it is. Its skirt is bordered at the bottom with a narrow band braided—or embroidered—in self and another color. The coat is straight with simulated belt at the long waistline, slightly flaring and long sleeves, and a loosely adjusted and interesting collar, in as much as it is a type greatly favored in collars for this spring. The sleeves make place for a deep band of braiding or embroidery that gives an invaluable finish to a rich looking suit.

If one is looking for something novel the suit at the right claims attention on this score. It has a tunic skirt and a very odd and ingeniously cut jacket that is extended at the bottom into shaped sash ends. Narrow braid in two widths outlines the edges, and the sleeves add their approval to the long bell-shaped style.

Blouses Offer Wide Choice

IN CHOOSING new blouses one is apt to waver between those that promise to be perpetually fresh looking—since they may be laundered easily—and those that entice with lovely color. In the end it turns out that both kinds find their way into the wardrobe. To wear with suits and separate skirts, the daintiness of sheer cotton fabrics, made up with exquisite needle work and good laces, never appeals in vain to women of refinement. There are many of these blouses in the shops now and they are among the things that a good seamstress can make for herself successfully. Delicate hand work is expensive for those who must buy it, but costs the needlewoman little but her time.

The new lingerie blouses are nearly all long-sleeved and have collars that reach the nape of the neck in the back but are open at the throat. Drawn work, hemstitching, pin tucks, narrow frills, fine laces in edgings and insertions tell the story of embellishments on them. Not all of them are white, for batiste is shown in some colors; porcelain blue makes a lovely blouse.

The blouses shown in the picture are both made of georgette, which appears in a lovely range of soft colors for spring. A peplum blouse appears at the left of the two, made with shoulder yoke and finished with satin pipings. Scattered motifs in bead embroidery settle the question of decoration, and the round neck survives in this model; but the sleeves are long. A narrow belt of georgette falls short of encircling the waist, stopping at each side of the front where two small buttons punctuate its finish.

Among so many colors in georgette one may choose a dark blouse, like that at the right. It has a short peplum at the back and has fallen in with the long-sleeved vogue, but chooses the flaring style. The neck reveals a pretty eccentricity in short slashes at each side, and for trimming there are bands of bugles and beads.

Freak Designs in Women's Clothing.

Never were the fantasy of London fashion experts and the daring of designers more severely taxed than they are today. Eccentric etceteras are for the moment woman's whim. Some of the latest freak designs which have been produced to gratify that whim include laces and net stockings, dragonfly buckles and garters, jeweled anklets, fur slippers and "Pussyfoot" socks.

Pretty Window Draperies.

Pretty window draperies are made by dyeing white marquisette Dutch curtains old rose and some blue. These curtains look very pretty over white curtains, and do not keep out the light like other heavy goods, such as poplin and cretonnes.

WELL-LOCATED SINK REDUCES HOUSEWIFE'S KITCHEN WORK

In a Well-Planned Kitchen Like This a Good Sink Is of First Importance.

One of the biggest savers of time, strength, and labor in the kitchen is the sink. Yet many women are struggling along with none at all or, at best, a poor and badly placed one. The following suggestions in regard to sinks are given by household specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture:

The size of the family and of the kitchen must determine the size of the sink, but a short sink with ample table and shelf room near it may be more convenient than a long sink. Two smaller sinks, one for the table dishes near the dining room and the other for general use in the kitchen, are very convenient.

No Cracks or Square Corners.

The material should be the best available, nonabsorbent of grease as well as of moisture, and there should be no cracks or square corners to increase the work of keeping it clean. A wooden sink, even when it receives an annual coat of paint, will absorb moisture and grease which attract insects, and is likely to be swarming with bacteria and to "sour" and have an unpleasant odor. Even drainboards of wood are not recommended unless they have a waterproof finish of varnish, oil, or paint. If a wooden sink is necessary, it is better to have it metal lined, provided the sheets of metal, which is usually tin, zinc, galvanized iron, copper or lead, are soldered where they are joined and all parts of the sink, including the tops of the sides, are covered with the metal, so that there is no chance for the wood to absorb moisture. Another plan is to have a cement sink built into a wooden frame and lined with sheet copper or tin.

Iron sinks of good quality are superior to wooden ones, since they do not absorb grease or moisture and are durable. They are easily kept clean if smooth (and they will soon wear smooth), but they have the disadvantage of neither showing dirt nor proclaiming their cleanliness. Unless the front is protected by a strip of wood, the dresses and aprons of the worker are likely to become stained with iron rust.

A soapstone or a slate sink is durable, but sometimes becomes uneven with wear, and if this happens much brushing and scrubbing are required to remove the sand and grease that gather in the depressions when vegetables are cleaned, dishes washed, etc. Like iron, they do not show whether they are clean or not.

Enameled-iron sinks are smooth, last well with careful use, and may be easily kept clean, but they are more expensive than iron. Porcelain sinks are similar to the enameled ones, but their price is almost prohibitive. Perhaps the ideal plan, if cost is not to be considered, would be to have an enameled or porcelain sink for the tableware in the kitchen or the pantry near the dining room and an iron or soapstone sink for the heavier kitchen ware.

The double sinks, with one basin for washing and another for draining dishes, are very convenient, but unfortunately they are relatively expensive. A small sink with a rubber stopper for its escape pipe may be used as a dishpan.

The plumbing should be easy of access, and therefore it is better that there should be no closet under the sink. Hooks or shelves under the sink or near it will accommodate everything usually kept in the dark, often musty, "sink closet" of older kitchens. A "sink closet" can be kept sweet and clean but it means extra work to do it.

Location of Drain Boards.

If possible, there should be a wide shelf or drain board on each side of the sink on the level with the rim of the latter, one to receive soiled dishes and the other clean ones. Some housekeepers have these covered with zinc. As in all other places where it is used, the metal must be neatly fitted and closely fastened down so as not to leave any chance for loose, rough edges, or to provide breeding places for insects or a lodging place for grease and dirt. If there is no place for permanent drain boards, sliding or hinged shelves may be used. A right-handed person usually holds the dish in the left hand while washing or wiping it, and the dishcloth, dish mop, or towel in the right hand. It is convenient, therefore, to have the dishes move from right to left as they pass from dishpan to rinsing pan, and from rinsing pan to drainer and tray. This should be kept in mind, and provision made for soiled dishes at the right and for a drain board at the left of the sink.

SUPERIOR QUALITIES OF HOME-MADE BREAD

Most Appetizing of Foods When One Is Hungry.

Loaf Should Be Light in Weight Considering Its Size, of Symmetrical Form, With an Unbroken, Golden-Brown Crust.

Good home-made bread is about the most appetizing of foods when one is hungry, but there are many kinds of home-made bread. Some is good, some is bad, and some indifferent. Which kind do you make? If you don't know, judge it by the following description of a good loaf given by the home economics kitchen of the United States Department of Agriculture:

Good bread is porous and contains a large number of holes or cells, all of which are of about the same size and shape. It is better for some reasons to think of it as a mass of tiny bubbles made of flour and water and hardened or fixed in shape by means of heat. This calls attention not only to the size of holes or cells, but also to the character of walls of the cells, which in good bread are always very thin.

A loaf of bread should be light in weight, considering its size, and should have a symmetrical form and an unbroken, golden-brown crust. The crust should be smooth on top and should have a certain luster, to which the term "bloom" has been given.

The loaf as a whole, the crust and the crumb, should be elastic. The loaf, if pressed out of shape, as it often is when slices are cut from it, should regain its form when the pressure is removed. Bits of the crust, if bent a little between the fingers, should show the same power to rebound, as should also the cut surface of the loaf if pressed.

The crumb should be creamy white in color and should have a "sheen," which may be compared with the bloom of the crust. This sheen can best be seen by looking across a slice rather than directly down into it. The distribution of the holes, on the other hand, and the thickness of the walls can best be examined by cutting a very thin slice and holding it up to the light.

The flavor of the bread should be, as nearly as possible, the flavor of wheat developed or brought out by the use of salt. This flavor is not easy to describe, but is familiar to those who have tasted the wheat kernel.

KITCHEN IS WORKSHOP

The kitchen is the workshop in most farm homes. In it the housekeeper and her helpers prepare the food for the family, and from it as a center carry on most of the other housework.

More and better work can be done in a well-lighted shop arranged for the comfort and convenience of the workers and equipped with good tools than in a dark shop where much time must be spent in unnecessary steps and energy wasted with scattered equipment. Business men have found this a sound principle, and it should be applied to the farm kitchen so that the housekeeper can do her work more quickly and with the least fatigue.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES

A small sink with a rubber stopper for its escape pipe may be used as a dishpan.

With roast pork serve apple sauce, mashed potatoes and green vegetable—peas, beans or spinach.

Celery, lettuce and other salad plants, because eaten raw, must be washed with the greatest care.

Sal soda in hot soap suds is splendid for removing grease from a gas range. See that it is thoroughly dried afterwards.

STYLES DECREED FOR THE CHILDREN

THE stores are displaying entire outfits of ready-made clothes for children of all ages. For the smaller ones there are so many practical and attractive frocks that it seems hardly worth while to make them at home, except that the home seamstress can put in little individual touches not to be found in ready-mades. The styles displayed and the materials used are interesting to every one, for these ready-made garments are the work of expert specialists and they have turned out frocks more charmingly childish than ever for the coming spring.

For pretty frocks white and colored organdies appear to have inspired the imagination of designers. The daintiest dresses are made of them nearly always in combination of white and one color, as white with frills of pink or blue or yellow. These frills or ruchings have picot edges usually in black. Very dressy little frocks are made of the light-colored organdies and have adorable sun-bonnets to match, shaped with many shirrings. There are many pretty frocks of colored, dotted swiss, made up with yokes and sleeves of white organdy matching the white dots. Where the body of the frock joins the short yoke sprays of tiny colored flowers and foliage are embroidered.

Following these sheer affairs come the small checked ginghams, in white and a color, banded and finished with white organdy which serves for collar, cuffs, sash or yokes, and sleeves, and then come the plain chambrays, usually trimmed with applique-scalloped borders of chambray in a darker color, outlined with simple stitches in mercerized floss. For very little folks, from two years to four or five, there are innumerable practical dresses and rompers, much like that one shown in the picture. Strong plain cotton or coarse linen is used for making it and its edges are finished with buttonholed scallops. There is a little simple needlework on plaits at each side and buttonholed slashes about the waist for a belt of ribbon or of the material, to slip through.

Resort Hats Beguile Us

THE shops are displaying those inspiring new hats made for the benefit of southern tourists, that allure all of us because of their beauty, and, quite as much, because of their suggestion of springtime and pleasure. They prove as interesting to those who stay at home as to those who journey south and furnish all the cues for demi-season and early spring millinery. In sports hats they set the pace for the coming summer, but they include tailored and dress hats that, at least, influence the incoming fashions in these hats.

Next to the sports hat is a dressy model in black hair braid with a flange of malines about its brim making a soft shadow in the eyes. Its soft, round crown is covered with a veil of fine chantilly lace. Such hats often shelter a small spray of exquisite flowers or fruit, snuggling against the crown or on the brim. A little less fragile is the hat with crown of paon velvet, embellished with stitches of silver-gray silk. This hat has an upturned brim edged with braid and is draped with a fine net veil having an embroidery in gray for a border. The street hat which finishes the group has a four-cornered brim covered with a striped and plaited material and a round crown draped with satin. It is another black and white combination and is finished with loops of black velvet in a daring pose on the right side of the brim.

The town clerk shall notify the town meeting members of the time and place at which town meetings are to be held, the notices to be sent by mail at least seven days before the meeting. The town meeting members, as aforesaid, shall be the judges of the election and qualifications of their members. A majority of the town meeting members shall constitute a quorum for doing business; but a less number may organize temporarily and may adjourn from time to time. Notice of every adjourned town meeting shall be posted by the town clerk in ten or more public places in the town, and he shall notify by mail the members of the town meeting of the adjournment at least twenty-four hours before the time of the adjourned town meeting. The notices shall state briefly the business to be acted upon at the meeting, and shall include notice of any proposed reconsideration.

All town meetings shall be public. The town meeting members as such shall receive no compensation. Subject to such conditions as may be determined from time to time by the members of the limited town meeting, any voter of the town who is not a town meeting member may speak, but he shall not vote. A town meeting member may resign by filing a written resignation with the town clerk, and his resignation shall take effect on the date of such filing. A town meeting member who removes from the town or from the precinct from which he was elected shall cease to be a town meeting member.

HOW NOMINATED

Section 3. Nomination of candidates for town meeting members to be elected under this act shall be made by nomination papers, which shall bear no political designation, and signed by not less than ten voters of the precinct in which the candidate resides, and filed with the town clerk at least ten days before the election. No nomination papers shall be valid in respect to any candidate whose written acceptance is not thereon or attached thereto.

MEMBERS TO VOTE

Section 4. The articles in the warrant for every town meeting, so far as they relate to the election of town officers, and town meeting members, as hereinbefore provided, to grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, referenda, and all matters to be acted upon and determined by ballot, shall be so acted upon and determined by the voters of the town in their respective precincts. All other articles in the warrant for any town meeting shall be acted upon and determined exclusively by town meeting members at a meeting to be held at such time and place as shall be set forth by the selectmen in the warrant for the meeting, subject to the referendum provided for by section seven.

ELECTION OF MODERATOR

Section 5. A moderator shall be elected by ballot, by the town meeting members, at each annual town meeting and shall serve as moderator of all town meetings, except as otherwise provided by law, until his successor is elected and qualified. If a moderator is absent, a moderator pro tempore may be elected by the town meeting members.

VACANCIES IN MEMBERS

Section 6. Any vacancy in the full number of town meeting members from any precinct may be filled until the next annual election by the remaining members of the precinct from among the voters thereof. Upon petition therefor, signed by not less than ten town meeting members from the precinct, notices of the vacancy shall be promptly given by the town clerk to the remaining members from the precinct in which the vacancy or vacancies exist, and he shall call a special meeting of such members for the purpose of filling any vacancy. He shall cause to be mailed to each of such members, not less than four days before the time set for the meeting, a notice specifying the object and the time and place of the meeting. At the said meeting a majority of the members shall constitute a quorum, and they shall elect from their own number a chairman and a clerk. The choice to fill any vacancy shall be by ballot, and a majority of the votes cast shall be required for a choice. The chairman and clerk shall make a certificate of the choice and forthwith file the same with the town clerk, together with a written acceptance by the member or members so chosen, who shall thereupon be deemed elected and qualified a town meeting member or members, subject to the right of all the town meeting members to judge of the election and qualification of members as set forth in section two.

If, within said five days a petition, signed by not less than one hundred voters of the town, containing their Christian names together with their street addresses, is filed with the selectmen asking that the question or questions involved in such vote be submitted to the voters of the town at large, then the selectmen, after the expiration of five days, shall forthwith call a special meeting for the sole purpose of presenting to the voters at large the question or questions so involved. The polls shall be opened at two o'clock in the afternoon and shall be closed not earlier than eight o'clock in the evening and all votes upon any questions submitted shall be taken by ballot, and a check list shall be used in the several precincts in the same manner as in the election of town officers. The questions submitted at the said town meeting shall be determined by vote of a majority of the voters at large voting thereon. The questions so submitted shall be stated upon the ballot in the same language and form in which they were stated when presented to said limited town meeting by the moderator, and as they appear upon the records of said limited town meeting. If such petition be not filed within the said period of five days, the vote in the limited town meeting shall become operative and effective upon the expiration of said period.

When he returned to Europe he applied to Mr. Selfridge for a position in his store and was put to work. It is said the reason for this was that Mr. Selfridge has always insisted that his daughter should marry a worker. Viscomte de Sibour was an aviator in the French army during the war.

"SHE'LL GET WELL?"

Synopsis. — Lonely and almost friendless, Tonnibel Devon, living on a canal boat with a brutal father and a worn-out, discouraged mother, wanders into a Salvation armyhall at Ithaca, N. Y. There she meets a young Salvation army captain, Philip MacCauley. Uriah Devon, Tony's father, returns to the boat from a protracted spree and announces he has arranged for Tony to marry a worthless companion of his, Reginald Brown. Mrs. Devon objects, and Uriah beats her. She intimates there is a secret connected with Tonnibel. In clothes that Uriah has brought Tony finds a baby's picture with a notification of a reward for its return to a Doctor Pendlehaven.

"If Reggie'd behave himself," replied the lady's daughter in a bored tone, "he wouldn't have to be chattered about. My advice is, mamma, that you give him a good raking over. If you don't mind your P's and Q's you'll never have Cousin John for your third husband. I can tell you that. You're no nearer marrying him than you were ten years ago, as I can see."

"I will, though, Miss Impudence," flashed back the woman. "Paul won't be much more than in his grave before Cousin John makes me his wife. I wish to heaven Paul would die, and—and I don't notice with all your flirting and maneuvering you're getting your claws on Philip. . . . Ah, that shot told!"

Katherine's face had gone red at the words, then very white.

"How perfectly vile," she exclaimed, with a catch in her voice. Then she straightened up and laughed. "Well, I'm not forty-five years old and pretending I'm thirty-five, anyway, nor do I dye my hair, and flounce out with lace to prove I'm young. There's a shot for you, mother darling!"

The irate Mrs. Curtis rushed out of the room, followed by her daughter's mocking laugh.

For three years Katherine had been madly, passionately in love with Philip MacCauley, an intimate friend of the family. The young man's home adjoined hers, and during his orphaned boyhood he'd spent a great deal of his spare time at the Pendlehavens. But since he'd returned from France and had taken up the Salvation army work, a work which Katherine held in open contempt, the intimacy had about ceased.

CHAPTER V.

Doctor John Has a Visitor.

After remaining hidden in the forest for some time, Tonnibel stole along toward Ithaca in the gathering gloom, her heart filled with hope. To get some medicine for Edith, and to take back the picture to the father who had offered money for it, were the two things she wanted to do now. Her young mind was busy with plans for her mother. If she could find some work to do, and Edith would go with her, she would get well again.

That evening, just after dinner, Dr. John Pendlehaven was sitting in his office, his mind disturbed, his heart aching for the sick brother upstairs, and he remembered that the first three or four years after the disappearance of Paul's daughter had been spent in a frantic search. All those working on the case had finally decided that Edith Mindil, a young nurse who had cared for the child most of the time since her mother had died and was devoted to her, had left home with the baby.

He sat up suddenly, for distinctly there came to him from the wide front porch the patter of feet like the soft footpads of some stealthy night-animal. He turned his eyes on the open door that led to the porch—and then he rose. There before him stood a girl, a silent girl looking at him beseechingly—a curious demanding expression in her dyes, and she was barefooted, too. He didn't speak, nor did he move forward. She was not a patient, that he knew, for only the rich came to him for treatment.

Suddenly she smiled and took two steps toward him. "Good evening," he managed to say.

"Paul Pendlehaven?" came in a breath, and Doctor John shook his head.

"Oh! I hoped you were!" was the swift reply. "I want to see the doctor."

The voice was filled with touching pathos, and the young face had grown suddenly grave.

"I'm one Doctor Pendlehaven," he said. "Won't you sit down?"

Tonnibel shook her head. She couldn't sit down in all this royal splendor, she who had been used to canal boats and rough benches to sit on.

"I'm kinda mussed up," she said in excuse. "I've come to make a dicker with—with Dr. Paul Pendlehaven."

"Tell me what you want of my brother?" he said gently. "Do you want him to help you?"

"Yep, a hull lot," she responded, "a great lot. My mother's awful sick. But I can't tell how she got that way, so don't ask me. But—but I thought mebbe if I brought Doctor Paul's baby back—" She paused, drew out of her blouse the picture and handed it out, "I thought if I didn't take any money for it, he'd help me, and mebbe wouldn't make me tell where I got it."

John Pendlehaven made no move to touch the little card she was holding out to him, and Tonnibel came nearer. Her fingers let go their hold on the picture, and it fell to the floor. And there before the startled man's eyes, she dropped down and began to sob, long bitter sobs such as John Pendlehaven had never heard from any of his own women kind.

"I want some one to help my mummy so bad," came to him from among the curls.

Then he shook himself, deep sympathy striking at him.

"Listen to me, my dear; you've done my brother the greatest favor in the world by bringing back this picture." He stooped and picked it up. "He loved it dearly; no money could have bought it."

Tonnibel's eyes, filled with tears, gazed up at him, and the red lips trembled.

"I don't want money," she faltered. "But my poor little mummy's sick. So I said to myself if the picture was worth cash, then mebbe I could get some medicine as a change off."

"We'll go to her instantly," said Pendlehaven. "Wait until I get my hat and coat, and I'll tell my brother you brought this to him."

In a few minutes he was back, finding her standing where he had left her.

Without a word they walked out into the night.

As they passed the Salvation army quarters the girl turned her head and looked at it. But she made no remark, and so rapid did she walk that Pendlehaven found himself taking long strides to keep up with her.

To say he was surprised when they turned from the boulevard road to a path leading to the west shore of the lake would be putting it lightly. But he didn't ask where they were going; somehow it made no difference to him. His strong, warm hand held the small brown one, and something in the touch of the girl's fingers made him thrill with pleasure. He found himself vowing that anything this strange child should ask of him, he'd do, no matter what it might be.

They passed over a culvert through which water, in tumbling roars, took its way down the hill. Just on the north side the girl stopped.

"Here we are to the ragged rocks," she said. "There's the boat where my mummy is. See that little light? Stand here a minute till I come back and get you."

It had suddenly occurred to Tonnibel that perhaps her father might have ventured home. If so, then she must prepare him for the doctor's coming.

She went immediately to her mother and looked down upon her. The swollen lids were still closed and the wan white face brought a rush of tears to the girl's eyes.

"I've brung some one to help you, darlin'," she whispered, but the woman made no move, if by chance she heard.

Clambering up the steps, Tonnibel was back at the doctor's side before he scarcely realized it.

"Mummy's alone," she said. "Come on."

Pendlehaven stooped over Edith Devon, gently taking her wrist in his fingers. For some time he sat beside her, then mixing a draught, succeeded in pouring it down her throat. The weary lids didn't lift, but one thin arm came rigidly upward, then fell back limply.

"Some one struck her, eh?" asked the doctor.

"Yep," replied the girl, and that was all.

Pendlehaven didn't ask anything more. In accepting the picture he had tacitly promised not to question her. What did it matter to him how the woman had come into her present condition? He would do his utmost, his very best for the sake of the trembling child who had brought back the baby's picture which might bring a new desire to live in his brother, Paul.

"Come outside," he said at length, rising. "I want to talk to you. She'll sleep a long time, perhaps until morning."

"She'll get well, huh?" demanded Tonnibel, in a whisper.

"Surely," he responded. "Of course."

The thought of her father coming home drunk flashed across the girl's mind. "I don't want you to stay if she's all right," she said with a backward bend of her head. "You said she'd get well, didn't you?" At the doctor's affirmative nod she went on: "Then I'll take you back up the hill, so you'll be safe."

"No," said Pendlehaven, firmly. "No, I won't let you. I can find my way all right, but I can't leave you like this."

Tonnibel extended her hand. "I said I was going with you," she answered crisply. "Come on, it'll be all hours before you get home now. I ain't sayin' I would love to have you in the Dirty Mary with mummy and me, but you might get killed if you stay."

"And what about you?" demanded Pendlehaven.

"Oh, I'm used to t," she responded. "Somebody might give me a swat or two on my bean, but that won't count for nothin'!"

When they reached the boulevard, he dropped her hand.

"Now go back," he said gently, "I can find my way. Will you come tomorrow at two, and let me know how she is? Or shall I come down?"

"I'll hike to you," answered Tonnibel. "If you're sure now you won't get lost, I'll run back to mummy. But—"

"I shall get home perfectly safe, child," came in quick interruption, and "Good-night. Thank you for bringing me the picture and allowing me to come to your mother."

CHAPTER VI.

"Tony" Swears an Oath.

When Tonnibel bent over the bunk, she saw her mother's eyes were open. She smiled sadly down upon her, sat on a stool and took one of the woman's thin hands in hers.

"Where's your daddy?" murmured Mrs. Devon.

"He's gone, mummy dear," breathed Tony. "I guess he thought some one was after him. You're feelin' a lot better, huh, honey?"

"Yep, but I'm thirsty, awful thirsty, baby dear."

Tonnibel gave her a drink, and reseated herself.

"You're goin' to get well," she ejaculated. "I brought a awful nice doctor here when you were so sick. He's just gone, and he left you them pills and that medicine in the glass."

The woman stared at the speaker as if she hadn't heard rightly.

"A doctor?" she whined. "What doctor?"

"Doctor Pendlehaven," replied Tonnibel. "He's a real nice man—John Pendlehaven."

Edith struggled up on her elbow.

"What'd you bring him here for?" she cried. "I hate the Pendlehavens. Uriah hates 'em—"

"I know that, mummy," Tony cut her off with, "but you was too sick to tell me what to do, and daddy wasn't here, so I just went and got the doctor myself. . . . Here! You mustn't sit up."

"I will! I will! Now tell me all he said from the beginning to end."

In silence Tonnibel helped her mother to a sitting position and wrapped the blankets around her. Then she began to tell her what had happened. The only thing she omitted speaking of was the baby's picture.

"He were the only doctor I knew about," she offered finally, flushing, "and he's the beautifulest man I ever saw. Mebbe he'll come down tomorrow to see you."

Edith dropped back on the bed, shivering in desperation.

"Get your clothes off, baby," she whispered. "Crawl in beside me. You're all wet."

"Take your medicine first, then I will," said Tonnibel. "Here—" She picked up the glass and then stood staring at the place she'd taken it from. "Why, the doctor must have left this money," she exclaimed, taking up a roll of bills. "Look, Edie, look!"

"Get off your clothes," repeated the woman, impassively. "Come on to bed, and go to sleep."

Tony takes an oath.

FEEDING THE BIRDS IN WINTER.

What about the birds in winter? Have you ever provided food for those that remain? Keep a sharp lookout, and you will discover birds now and then that you would naturally have supposed to be South at this time of the year, in a mild climate.

Nature-club members not only provide for the stragglers, but go afield in organized parties at regular intervals and place food at stations in protected locations. You can help the birds in your locality, and I know that you will get enough enjoyment out of establishing lunch counters and keeping them supplied to be satisfied that the time so spent is worth while. After establishing a bird restaurant, however, you must not grow careless and neglectful, or your feathered friends may perish as a result. Suet, nuts, birdseed and scraps of meat and bread are relished.

In Fig. 1 I have shown a good form of suet holder to strap around tree trunks. You will see by Fig. 2 that there is a wire inclosure to prevent cats and other animals from removing the food, while by Fig. 3 you will see that the front is hinged to open for putting in the suet, and that there is an arrangement for locking it when filled.

First cut the two triangular blocks A (Fig. 2), and the back block B. Then cut wires of equal length for the front inclosure, fasten them to the short edges of blocks A with double-pointed tacks (Fig. 4), and hinge the upper block A to the top edge of block B. Screw a screweye into the two side edges of block B, to tie hanger ropes to, and screw a screweye into the underside of the lower block A, and another into block B, in the right positions so a peg will slip through the two to lock the holder (Fig. 3).

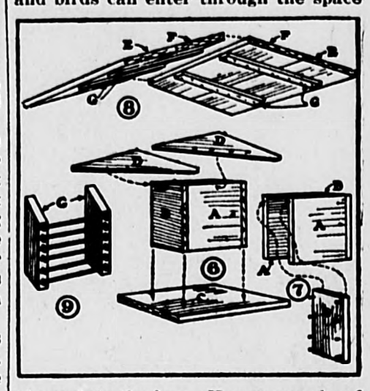

Figure 5 shows an excellent feeding station to hang from a tree branch, or to mount upon a post. First build a box of two sides and two ends (A and B, Figs. 6 and 7), 6 inches wide, 8 inches long and 8 inches deep, or, if you can find a box of about these proportions, take it and remove both the cover and bottom. Mount the box upon a 12-by-14-inch base (C, Fig. 6), then prepare the triangular pair of gable ends D 16 inches long and 3 inches high, and nail them to the upper side edges of the box, with their ends projecting equally.

Figure 8 shows how to fasten together the pair of boards E and F with battens G, for each side of the roof. Place the battens so they will rest upon gable ends D (Fig. 6). After fastening the roof sections in place, tack canvas or oilcloth upon them, to make a water-tight roof.

Boards B do not extend to the roof, and birds can enter through the space above, into the box. Keep a supply of seed inside, to be accessible when outside food is covered with snow.

Figure 9 shows the suet rack. Fasten one to each end of the center box. Blocks G need not be over 1 inch wide by 6 inches high. Make the wire guard like the front of the suet rack in Fig. 2.

A PERPETUAL CALENDAR.

You can make the perpetual calendar shown in Fig. 1 for your desk.

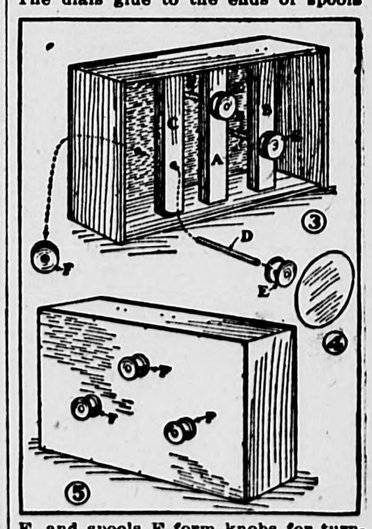

Fig. 1 shows it completed, and Fig. 2, how it appears with front removed. The inside arrangement consists of three dials, one having the days of the week printed upon it, one the months, and one the dates of the month. The day dial and the month dial can be of equal diameter, but the date dial must be about one-half again as large to accommodate the 31 figures. The three dials must be pivoted so the lettering of the days, months and dates will show up behind the opening in the front when the disks are turned, and in order to make the front of the case symmetrical in appearance the openings should be placed at equal distances from the ends, two on the same level, and the third directly over the center of the space between the two (Fig. 1).

The day dial and the date dial should be pivoted in place first, the former in the exact center of the length of the box, and the latter close to it. Then the month dial should be placed with its center upon a level with the center of the date dial, and its outer edge the same distance from the center of the length of the box as that of the date dial.

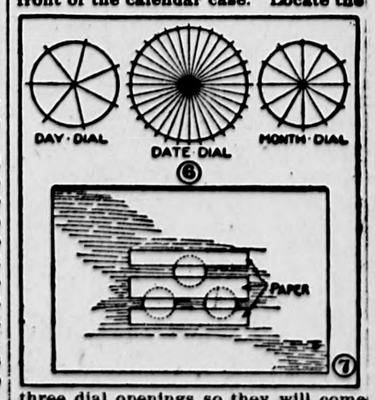

The dials are pivoted upon axles that turn in holes bored through three uprights, A, B, and C (Figs. 2 and 3), and holes bored through the back of the case. Fasten the uprights A, B and C in the right positions for the centers of the dials, five-eighths inch back of the front edge of the box, and mark these centers upon them, then bore the axle holes through them and out through the back of the case. The holes should be one-quarter inch in diameter. Cut the supporting axles (D, Figs. 3 and 4) to fit them, and glue a small silk spool upon each end as shown at E and F in Figs. 3 and 5. The dials glue to the ends of spools

E, and spools F form knobs for turning them.

Fig. 6 shows how to divide the day dial into seven equal parts, the month dial into 12 and the date dial into 32, so as to simplify the matter of spacing the lettering equally. The easiest way to prepare the lettering is to get a small calendar, cut it up, and paste the days, months and dates upon the dials in the spaces divided off for them, as shown in Fig. 2.

Fig. 7 shows the inner side of the front of the calendar case. Locate the three dial openings so they will come exactly over the readings on the dials, and glue strips of paper over the upper and lower thirds of each so as to leave a slot just wide enough to expose the lettering upon the dials.

After you have adjusted the calendar so every portion is in perfect working order, fasten on the front of the case.

WILBUR THEATRE

Billy B. Van, James J. Corbett and William Rock head the cast of the William Rock Revue of 1920, which is the offering at the Wilbur Theatre, Boston, for four weeks. The second week begins Monday, Jan. 31. The Rock Revue has been winning an enviable reputation as a laugh show of the first order, and has won the plaudits of the critics everywhere for its magnificent costuming and elaborate stage settings. Presented in 21 scenes, it is said to be the most gorgeous musical production on tour, as well as the funniest, laughs coming at the rate of one a minute. Billy B. Van, formerly with "The Rainbow Girl", furnishes most of the fun in the piece but is ably assisted by Messrs. Corbett and Rock, as well as by other members of the company of 65. Although the comedy element is an important part of the attraction, those other attributes of musical revues—melodies and dancing—have not been neglected, many attractive dance numbers and a host of song hits being provided.

MAJESTIC THEATRE

Eddie Cantor and his blushing, breezy, Bacchian beauties, "The Midnight Rounders", with Nan Halperin, begins the last three weeks at the Majestic Theatre on Monday night, Jan. 31. Capacity houses have established themselves as the rule for the run of this romping Rabelaisean, rondelay of fashion, fad and fair females. In speed it has lightning tied to the starting post; while its myriad colors and beauteous damsels are the despair of the rainbow. Such an unrestricted riot of fun, beauty, wit and melody the world has not seen since Jupiter set the fashion for blue Sundays by prohibiting jazz and the shimmy.

Cantor has a number of new songs laden with lyrics ludicrous and lawless, which he puts over with all the pep for which he is famous. His surrounding company is the biggest and best assembly of laugh-hounds, and celestial beauty ever assembled this side of the Styx. All previous records for attendance and satisfaction have been broken by this rapturous revelation in the revue line. It has established itself as the fastest, funniest, furore of headliners, hits, harmony and heavenly houris that ever visited a mortal town in times of stress.

Quaker Minister Is Grateful to Tanlac

Rev. Parker Moon

Nearly everybody in Southwest Missouri either knows or has heard of the Rev. Parker Moon, who for a full half century has devoted his life and talents to Sunday school and organization work for the Society of Friends or Quakers.

"Uncle Parker," as he is more familiarly known, came from fine old rugged Quaker stock, and there is not a better known or more highly respected citizen in that part of the state. In referring to his remarkable restoration to health by Tanlac, he said:

"About five years ago I suffered a general breakdown. My principal trouble was nervous indigestion. My appetite was very poor and my food seldom agreed with me, and I had to live on a very restricted diet. I suffered a great deal from headaches and dizzy spells; I had severe pains across the small of my back and was badly constipated most of the time. In fact, I was so weak and rundown I was not able to attend to my duties.

"This condition made me very nervous and I could not sleep at night. Frequently I would lie awake most all night and was in that condition more or less for five years. My physician said he could not do anything for me and suggested a change of climate. I then moved to Texas and went back and forth three times, but did not get the relief I had hoped for. Finally, I got so bad off I was not able to get around with any degree of comfort. I was also told I had heart trouble.

"I had read about Tanlac and, as it had been very highly recommended to me, I decided to try it. I got a bottle and had taken only a few doses until I could notice a marked improvement in my condition. I noticed especially that I was not troubled any more with sour stomach after eating, which was a great relief.

"I kept on taking Tanlac until I fully regained my health. My appetite is splendid; I enjoy my meals and I do not find it necessary now to take any laxative medicines of any kind. I can sleep much better and am not nearly so nervous.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Tanlac to anyone who needs a good system builder, or who suffers with stomach trouble. I have recommended Tanlac to a great many of my friends and am pleased to reach others by giving this statement for publication."

Tanlac is sold by leading druggists everywhere.

The Horn of Plenty

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Horn O' Plenty Farm?" repeated the postmaster, leaning over the counter and staring at the shabbily dressed young man with a worn suitcase. "Well—I ain't heard it called that in 20 years."

"What is it called now?" asked the stranger stiffly.

"Nothing much," laughed the postmaster. "Might be called 'Rib Rock'—ain't much else but rocks and sand left since old man Thatcher died."

"Twelve years ago—he was my grandfather, Robert Thatcher. He left the farm to me."

"Want' know! Been a long time coming after it," grinned the native.

"You must have known the place was leased for ten years."

"Yes—and if you ever collected any rent from Seedy Jones, you did well."

"I haven't collected it—yet," said young Thatcher quietly.

"Hum—going to live there?"

"Yes, if I ever find the way!"

The postmaster smiled foolishly and called a lounger from the listening group on the porch. "You going past Seedy Jones' old place, Lennie, you might take this gentleman along—there's a good hotel there if you don't find accomodations at the Horn o' Plenty!"

"Nothing Much," Laughed the Postmaster.

John Thatcher drove away in an ancient automobile that roved distractedly about the road and finally came to a scrambling halt in front of a large house set in the midst of overgrown trees and thick shrubbery.

"Cheerful outlook, ain't it?" laughed the youth called "Lennie," as he turned his rattling machine about, "night before Thanksgiving and a deserted house!"

John Thatcher was silent as he surveyed his inheritance. Dreary, indeed, and so different from the picture of it, carried in his heart since he was a young lad. His grandfather's farm had been the pride of the countryside then, and now when fortune had ceased to smile upon young John, he had turned to the farm.

He would go back to that, alone, perhaps, but it would only be for a while—Helen Main had promised to marry him when he could support her, and he had proudly told her that he would claim her on St. Valentine's day. "Horn of Plenty" farm had been his dream of fortune and he found this.

By eight o'clock he had learned the worst—bare rooms, ill-used and unclean; decaying porches; and a peep in the locked furniture stored away, where they had been placed when his grandfather died and the place was rented.

"I wonder what Helen would say—he thought miserably as he went back to the hotel. In the morning he had a short note from Helen's father. "We will motor out to your farm this morning. Give us Thanksgiving dinner."

John Thatcher's lips snapped shut as he crammed the letter into the fire. So Helen's father really knew the condition of the farm and was putting him on his mettle. They would arrive at noon. He had five hours to work, and so little money. Well, it would be a home-made Thanksgiving—the best he could do, and give thanks for that! It was a slender chance, for James Main was rich and prosperous.

Lennie Brown and his car took John Thatcher out to the old place with a load of purchases. "I guess there's plenty of wood outside there, and my folks have some barrels of big red apples—I'll bring some over," said Lennie when he heard of the expected guests.

The old Thatcher place echoed to the flying footsteps of the two young men. From garret to cellar they went; the old pump squeaked as water was needed to mop up the floors of the big dining room and the kitchen after vigorous sweeping. Then breadths of rag carpets from the store in the attic were laid down, and furniture carried down—a round walnut dining table and chairs, baskets of lavender sprigged china and kitchenware, and a cedar chest gave up tablecloths and napkins, yellowed with age, and some of the old Thatcher silver.

"Who says women's work is never done?" groaned Lennie as he rubbed the silver knives and forks.

"I hope they will like this fried chicken," muttered John as he bent over the great fire in the kitchen fireplace, where they were cooking over some iron trivets they had discovered in the attic.

"Guess these sweet potatoes are about done," said Lennie as he drew them out of the ashes. "I'm going out to get some of those yellow and brown chrysanthemums to put on the table, and some more wood. Ma sent over some jelly and cider and cream an—" the door closed on the list of Mrs. Brown's generosity.

At 12 o'clock John Thatcher looked around at the comfortable dining room, which began to seem like home, with its blazing fires on the wide hearth. "This is a good beginning," thought John Thatcher. "If they will come now, they can see that I'm starting as a good provider, anyway!"

Then he heard the horn of the expensive car that brought the Mains, and suddenly overcome by the wealth and position of the girl he loved, the place seemed poor and shabby and his efforts fruitless. But it was his home, and he squared his shoulders, looked at the lovely table with its flowers, its crimson and purple fruit, and the bright hearth fire.

"It is perfectly wonderful," Helen said over and over again, while her parents nodded approval. They smilingly watched the two young people as they hurried to and fro putting the meal on the table—they investigated the house and asked the source of each article they ate.

When they had finished and were gathered about the fire, Mrs. Main touched her husband's arm. "Tell him, father,—tell John about it."

"We all came out here yesterday morning—got here before you did, and think you've got a discouraging job, but it will do you good, and your neighbors good, to have you bring back the name of the Horn of Plenty farm. You've shown what you can do with a very little, and you've made the most of what you've got. What you need now is a good wife—well, come into my office until March and save your money. Then you can marry Helen, and we will come and dine with you next Thanksgiving day if you will promise to provide the entire dinner from the products of your farm."

"My grandfather did it, and so can I," declared John Thatcher, and he did.

Nowadays if you should ask for Horn of Plenty farm every one will eagerly point the way: "The biggest white house on the street, the place with the flower gardens, the big farm yonder," and they might add: "The happiest home in the village—that's Horn of Plenty farm!"

HAD BEAUTY WITHOUT SENSE

Englishwoman's Prodigious Vanity Made Her the Laughing Stock of the City of London.

Maria Gunning (Lady Coventry), was so beautiful that she complained to George II that so many people stared at her whenever she went out that she thought she should be provided with a guard.

On the following Sunday London witnessed a curious spectacle. Two sturdy sergeants in uniform came marching down the Mall. Behind them walked the lovely Maria and behind her strode 12 guardsmen provided by the king. The populace roared and howled, jeered and joked, hung about the rear of the procession and doubled up with glee as they watched Maria's stately progress. A woman of more sense would never have provoked such an outbreak, or, if embarked on it thoughtlessly would have retreated when she saw what a spectacle she was making of herself. But Maria was oblivious to insult and coarse jests. For two hours she paraded up and down the Mall, and the excitement mounted so high that several members of the mob were arrested.

Her loveliness waned and she reclined for hours on a couch, gazing into a mirror to try to reassure herself that she was as charming as ever. She could not doubt finally that her radiance was departing. It was then she left her couch and lived thereafter in a great bed hung about with dark curtains. A small lamp gave but a glimmer of light, and neither friends nor servants were allowed to gaze upon the face of the lovely Maria. Even the food that she ate was passed through the curtains. She died in the year 1760, only 27 years old.

A Strain.

Not being a press agent, we'll just call a certain popular actor, who is a famous "good fellow," Smith. A couple of friends were talking about him the other day, when one asked:

"Has Smith a good role in the new play?"

"Most emotional he ever had in all his career," was the impressive reply.

"Why, I didn't understand that the play was so much that way."

"It isn't—only Smith's part. You see it's one of those 'wet' plays, and poor Smith is being constantly offered drinks which the action compels him to refuse. Why, he'll be a total wreck by the end of the week."

ONE DAY

By MARY J. HITCHCOCK.

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Oliver Bryne ran his car down to the turn in the woodland road. Then his horn barked a greeting to the blue clad figure hurrying toward the car. The woman waved her hand in response.

"Come, help me over the fence," she called.

With a conscious quickening of pulses the man lifted her over. She laughed up into his face.

"Did I keep you waiting? I tried to be on time.

"I was afraid—"

"For me—or of me?" With the question her laughter rang out. Her eyes challenged him.

"The Queen rides out today," he quoted softly as he helped her into the car.

"Where?" as she snuggled down beside him.

He named an inn some miles away.

"But why go there?"

"Well, one must eat; and I remember that you love to dance—"

"You wouldn't like it?"

He leaned to her. "Not for a single minute, but—"

"We won't go, then."

"Well, where?"

She told him and he stared at her, wondering.

"You told me you never wanted to see that place again—that you wanted to forget—"

"That was more than a month ago."

"You mean that now you don't—?"

"What would you forget if you could?"

"First of all that my wife has decided to divorce me."

"You're sorry?"

"As the devil!" explosively. "And for all the sins of omission and commission that made her think she would be happier without me."

And now she could not look at him, though she tried. "You say these things—and to me!" she managed in smothered tones.

"To you first of all! Allie—." He leaned to her again, his breath hot on her cheek.

"There's the place!" she cried, conscious even as she spoke that it was a mistake. Then, in a rush of swift confusion: "Perhaps you can't help being yourself, but, I should think you'd get tired of your own wilfulness at times."

"Do I need to confess it?" She glanced at him with slant eyes. "I got tired long before you showed me—"

"That your wife was tired of finding you always cross and impatient. You can be awfully crabbed!" she interposed.

"I haven't a doubt of it!" The new air of humility sat well upon him. "But it's the nature of a crab to present a hard outside—they get softer and sweeter the deeper you go."

She smiled through humid eyes. "It's because I've begun to realize that—that I am running away with you like this."

"Are we running away—?"

"Don't you know—?"

"There!" He slowed for the stop as she leaned forward, seeking out with eager glance the little rustic house among the trees. "It looks just as it did that first time we came here. But you've taken the name down!"

"Why not? Honeymoon Camp doesn't seem fitting—now."

"But it looks as if it might be related to a honeymoon even now."

"Open the door, please. I'm going in."

"Don't you realize that you can't—you ought not?"

"Are you going to prevent it?"

"All right, but I warned you," said Bryne.

"We'll have lunch," she said, tugging at the side hampers. "Take them in, please."

"We'd better start back as soon as possible," he said, as they pushed back their chairs.

She looked up quickly. "I'm not going back."

"But you can't stay here—alone!"

"I planned on having you for company."

He checked the impulse to draw her into his arms.

"If that's all—we must get back before dark."

"You—you—want to go?"

"Only for your sake," as quietly as his bounding pulses would allow. "I'll wait outside if you'll hurry."

She let him go. Then, picking up a magazine—relic of their former visit—she sat down at the window, pretending to read. Presently, she looked up, smiling, as she met the accusing look in his eyes. He did not suspect that she had let him stand in the doorway, while she appeared to be absorbed in the story.

"The gasoline—it's all run out!" His tone accused as well as his eyes. "You—"

"And, if I did?" she asked, shamelessly.

"But, why—?"

Almost, he knew what her answer would be. But he listened eagerly, breathlessly, thirsting for her broken utterance as the desert thirsts for rain.

"Because I—I—wanted to end our misunderstandings."

"Then you really don't want to divorce me?"

But he did not need to ask. Her eyes were saying wonderful things.

"I'm the happiest—!"

"No, I am!" she corrected.

And this time he did not resist the impulse that moved him. His arms reached for her—held her close.

SYMPTOMS WOMEN DREAD

Mrs. Wilson's Letter Should Be Read by All Women

Clearfield, Pa.—"After my last child was born last September I was unable to do all of my own work. I had severe pains in my left side every month and had fever and sick dizzy spells and such pains during my periods, which lasted two weeks. I heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound doing others so much good and thought I would give it a trial. I have been very glad that I did, for now I feel much stronger and do all of my work. I tell my friends when they ask me what helped me, and they think it must be a grand medicine. And it is. You can use this letter for a testimonial if you wish."—Mrs. HARRY A. WILSON, R. F. D. 5, Clearfield, Pa.

The experience and testimony of such women as Mrs. Wilson prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct such troubles by removing the cause and restoring the system to a healthy normal condition. When such symptoms develop as backaches, bearing-down pains, displacements, nervousness and "the blues" a woman cannot act too promptly in trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound if she values her future comfort and happiness.

GREET DEFOE AS SENSATION

New York Boxing Fans Proclaim St. Paul Featherweight as Greatest Fighter in Game.

Bill DeFoe of St. Paul is being hailed by the New York sport writers and boxing fans as the great featherweight in the game today. In his latest match the St. Paul phenom stopped Frankie Brown of New York in 11 rounds. Brown had previously soundly thrashed the featherweight champion, Johnny Kilbane, knocking the champion down twice in their no-decision affair in Philadelphia. DeFoe made the New York feather look like a novice, displaying the same finesse and punching ability he showed in previous bouts. The only thing separating DeFoe from the featherweight title, according to the fans, is the formality of getting Champion Kilbane into a ring. The photograph shows Billy DeFoe in boxing pose.

COLUMBIA MAY GET STADIUM

President Butler Advocates Erection of Big Plant to Serve Needs of Students.

Erection of a stadium is urged by President Nicholas Murray Butler in his annual report as president of Columbia university. Doctor Butler says:

"The plan for a stadium along the North river, between One Hundred and Sixteenth and One Hundred and Twentieth streets, which has lain dormant for years, should be vigorously revived and an attempt made to carry it to completion.

"This stadium, in addition to serving the needs of the students and alumni of Columbia, would be a great addition to the open-air resources of the city of New York and would speedily become the center for public gatherings, games and displays of various kinds.

"South field would then be left, as should be the case, to serve as a playground for the great army of students who wish to engage in sport or to take open-air exercise without becoming members of a particular and highly trained team."

JOCKEYS MUST BE THIRTEEN

Rule Does Not Apply to Riders Coming From England—Must Contribute to Benefit Society.

No jockey can ride in France unless he is at least thirteen years of age, and the application for his license must be accompanied by a copy of his birth certificate. This does not apply to jockeys coming over from England to ride, as it is specially stipulated in the first clause of rule 78 that "jockeys holding a license from the English Jockey club are qualified to ride in France." Every applicant for a jocket's license is also required to forward a subscription to the benefit society for the assistance of trainers, jockeys and stable lads; jockeys who live within a radius of 80 miles of Paris have to send 40 francs, and others 20 francs. Under the new regulations, apprentices must be not less than thirteen and not more than twenty-one years of age.

THOROUGHBREDS WILL BE READY FOR RACES

Training at Hot Springs to Put Horses on Edge.

More Spirited Competition Than Usual Predicted for Big Turf Events to Be Run Over Western and Eastern Tracks.

The decision of Samuel C. Hildreth, James M. McClelland and Senator Johnson N. Camden of Kentucky to have their stables, or, at least, parts of their stables, winter at Oakland park, Hot Springs, Ark., presages a competition more spirited than usual next spring for the Kentucky Derby, Latonia Derby, Withers, Belmont and Preakness stakes, a series of three-year-old specials that will have a gross value of upward of $150,000 and are sure to attract the best colts and fillies of eligible age in the country.

Inchcape and Grey Lag of the Hildreth-Sinclair stable; Leonardo II., Muleiber, Bon Homme and, possibly, Serapis of the McClelland establishment, and Rangoon and, possibly, Darjeeling of the stable of Senator Camden, are going to get the sort of preparation for the Kentucky Derby of 1921 that George Smith and Star Hawk got in the genial climate of South Carolina for the derby of 1916, in which they were destined to finish one, two, that Omar Khayyam got at Hot Springs for the spring of 1917; that Exterminator got for the great handicaps of 1919 and Eternal got for the derby of 1919.

In the cases of Omar Khayyam and Exterminator, wintering at Hot Springs and training there in the early spring proved highly effective. Omar Khayyam won his derby in 1917 and Exterminator was most successful in the big spring handicaps in which he started in 1919. Eternal left Hot Springs for Kentucky in the spring of 1919 a thoroughly fit horse, but it chanced that his derby was run through heavy going which he did not like and Sir Barton and Billy Kelly did like. So Sir Barton won easily and Billy Kelly, which had succumbed to Eternal's speed at Laurel park in the autumn of 1918 in the first renewal of the John R. McLean Memorial Cup, finished one, two, while the Sweep colt was unplaced.

A lot of attention will be paid by winter speculators to the derby and Preakness candidates of the stable of Harry Payne Whitney—Prudery, Exodus, Tryster, Dartmoor, Broomspun, etc.—which are wintering in New Jersey, at Brookdale farm. These youngsters showed class in the season past.

Jim Thorpe, Carlisle Star, Demonstrates to Gotham Fans Why He Is Rated High.

most feared of foes when at Carlisle, Thorpe displayed his remarkable punting ability when he sent the ball a distance of 67 yards during the game. He also tore off a run of 60 yards through the entire opposing team, the Buffalo All-Americans, composed of some of the greatest college players of the last decade. The All-Americans defeated the Bull Dogs 7 to 3. This photograph of Thorpe was made before the game which was played at the Polo Grounds.

WOMEN ON GRIDIRON

Varsity football played by women is suggested as likely in a few years by Maj. Frank W. Cavanaugh, coach of the Boston college eleven.

"Women have shown they could fight," he said, "and I should not be surprised if in five years there was agitation for varsity football among the women's colleges."

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments; corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcels Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Adv.

WELL KNOWN AS MOSES' POOL

Is Believed to Be That Mentioned in the Bible in Connection With Great Law Giver.

In the Egyptian desert, about ten miles east of Suez, is situated a picturesque pool known as "Moses' Well." This is believed to be the well mentioned in the Bible, where Moses, at the bidding of the Lord, cast a branch into the bitter waters, and they were sweetened. Set in a deep grove of date-palms and pomegranate trees, the well is a dark, calm, mysterious looking pool, faithfully reflecting the palms which fringe its edges. The scene at sunrise, when the first rays strike the still water, is exquisite beyond description.

Attempts to identify various natural beauties and locations with mentions or descriptions as given in the Bible have always been difficult, owing to the fact that the records of the rulers of Egypt at the time of the captivity of the Jews were destroyed by rulers that came into power immediately afterward. The motive was jealousy, and a determination to wipe from the minds of the people any regrets for rulers gone.

The head of a department in one of the downtown stores has her own ideas of sane dressing, and is very critical of the girls under her charge. Recently one of them has been talking a great deal about the bad cold she has and the fear she feels of taking pneumonia. She was in the midst of her discussion when the head walked in. She listened a minute and then said: "I wouldn't blame the Lord if he did send you pneumonia."

The girl was aghast. "Why?" she gasped.

"Just for the way you dress," the older woman retorted. "You don't dress as if you cared a bit for your health. Your dresses are entirely too low down at the top and entirely too high up at the bottom."—Indianapolis News.

WEYMOUTH, JANUARY 28, 1921

Old Rice Tavern Jackson Square

ABOUT 1850 TO 1860

Cyrus Washburn had much to do with the growth of our village, but wholly outside Jackson Square, from which we seem to have wandered.

Nearly back of the tinshop stood the old "corn barn" raised two or more feet on posts to keep the rats away and at that time used to store dried alewives, or herring as they are better known.

Farther down the slope on the edge of the meadow was an old barn, in use by Mr. B. and James Lovell, who kept a livery stable. This barn was burned some years ago.

Across from the woodshed on the corner going north, where now lives Mr. H. A. Tirrell, was "Uncle Lovell's" vegetable garden, parallel with Commercial street, which was held above the garden by a high face wall covered in summer with morning glories.

About this time George Hunt, one of two brothers who were bakers in Hingham, bought the garden to build upon the lot; a deal that caused much adverse comment among the natives. However, Mr. Hunt filled the "hole' and built and occupied the house stil, standing there.

Opposite the Bicknell shed, where now stands the bulletin board of the White Church, was the village store, Henry Loud, proprietor

Next the store lot was that now occupied by the Merchant building with a bank at the front several feet above the street, with a steep side hill at the rear. On this lot was a buliding used at times for various purposes. Whether Mr. R. V. Merchant, whose heirs still own the property, remodelled or removed it is uncertain. Mr. Merchant built on the lot and carried on the tailoring business and was burned out some years later. He rebuilt, which building was also burned several years ago, making the third total-loss fire within a hundred feet on that side of the square.

From this bank above the street level Daniel Pratt, the Great American Traveller (self-styled) once held forth to a small but appreciative audience of residents. Daniel, a crack-brained "orator" hailed from Prattville, a suburb of Chelsea. This used to be a current phrase: "Deader than Chelsea", but Daniel in his way was very much alive. The subject of his discourse is forgotten, but one of his songs: "Roll on Silver Moon", is still heard occasionally, as it is especially adapted to "Yodeling" a style of singing common among the Swiss, sometimes called the Dutch Warble. Daniel's warbling, however, was not of the Dutch variety. Daniel himself was of the same type as "The Rt. and Hon." John Foster Gray, who for many years furnished the motive power for the Gazette press. When Martin E. and John Foster got together it was certainly an example of "extremes meet."

Some of our readers will remember John Foster's Fourth of July orations Both John and Daniel were harmless "eccentrics", whose harangues were enjoyed by both speakers and hearers but not so their successors today. The I. W. W. leaders and their intellectual (?) sympathizers, who are as dangerous as a cigarette-smoking hunter in the woods.

The next place we strike in "swinging 'round the circle" is the place owned and occupied by W. J. Dunbar once the "Old Rice Tavern." It seems strange today that this house is set so low, and the Bicknell house opposite so high, but the explanation is simple. If you are acquainted with Weymouth highways start on Commercial street at the Hingham line and with "your mind's eye" travel through East, North and Weymouth Landing to its end well into Braintree; full of bends and sharp turns from end to end. Hard for autos today, but easy for ox teams and farm wagons. Our first settlers each choosing for himself and clearing for a farm such land as he thought desirable, with at first a foot, or maybe a cartpath, connecting. Every new settler, or most of them, built on the line of the cartpath, which later became a road. Later generations improved the roads, cutting off hills and filling valleys, leaving dwellings, some too high and some below the street level. Hence the Bicknell house and Rice's Tavern.

Notice how much straighter is Broad street cut through to Weymouth Landing less than a hundred years ago. Here the street precedes the houses. There are streets in Weymouth that are for long distances as straight as an arrow. These were parts of Turnpikes built with private capital and funished with toll gates and travellers had to pay to pass over them

Eggs a plenty when the Mercury's Down!

It is the way you are feeding and not so much the season that is responsible for the eggs you are getting. If you will feed for eggs now, you will get eggs now.

Grains furnish too much material to make yolks, but less than enough for an equal number of whites. Hens can't lay incomplete eggs.

To Make More Eggs

Purina Chows are rich in protein, the principal element in whites. Just enough, and no more, of each element is used to keep a perfect balance of whites and yolks. Maximum egg production is the result.

"More Eggs or Money Back"

The money paid for both Chows will be refunded if hens when fed Purina Chicken Chowder with Purina Hen Chow, as directed, do not lay more eggs than when fed any other ration.
